EVENTS IN TENNESSEE.

A Message from Gov. Brown, of Georgia.

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY OF THE POTOMAC, Saturday, March 28.

The Richmond Dispatch, of the 27th inst., notes the execution by hanging of Capt. M. DA HARE, of Arkansas, who was sent out by Gen. HANSON to clear the White River District of INGRAM'S guerrilla band.

Capt. A. WIZERTS has been tried by Court-martial in Richmond, and sentenced to be hung on the 3d of April, for the murder in Fauquier County of Capt. STEVENS, of the Confederate army.

The railroad bridge over Holston River, at Zollicoffer, Tenn., which was destroyed by the Union Army, has been repaired, and trains are now running over it regularly.

On Wednesday, at Lynchburgh, fine grades of tobacco ranged at $1 50 per pound, and smoking ranged from $1 50 to $1 75. The demand was greater than the supply.

IMPORTANT REPORTS FROM VICKSBURGH.

VICKSBURGH, Wednesday, March 25.

Two of the enemy's gunboats attempted to pass down the river this morning, when our batteries opened upon them with effect. One was sunk opposite our batteries. The other was badly riddled, and now lies opposite the canal batteries. It is expected that the latter will be sunk. She was set on fire, and it appears to have been extinguished. The firing of our batteries was splendid. Almost every shot took effect.

AN OFFICIAL REPORT OF THE AFFAIR.

JACKSON, Miss., March 25.

To Gen. S. Cooper, Adjutant and Inspector General, Richmond:

The following was received this morning from Gen. PEMBERTON:

"Four boats came to the turn at Sunflower this morning. Two of them attempted to pass our batteries. One was sunk with all on board, and the other lies at the mouth of the canal, apparently disabled.

S. C. PEMBERTON,
Lieutenant-General Commanding.

THE YAZOO RIVER EXPEDITION.

VICKSBURGH, Wednesday, March 25, Via Memphis, Thursday, March 26.

"On Saturday morning Col. FRANCISCO, commanding the batteries at the junction of Deep Creek and Sunflower River, thirty-five miles above its junction with the Yazoo, repulsed the enemy, and destroyed, it is said, three gunboats and drove the balance back.

Col. FRANCISCO has sufficient force to hold the enemy in check, and recommends that reinforcements be sent in the rear of the enemy to cut of his retreat.

The movement on the part of the enemy was to sink our batteries on Haines' Bluff, on the Yazoo.

MOBILE, Thursday, March 26.

The Jackson Appeal says that the repulse of the enemy in their attempts to enter Sunflower River has been definitely ascertained. The fleet was driven back, and a large number of their barges captured.

The enemy are reported to have made another advance against Fort Pemberton, with considerably increased strength. Every effort will be made to defeat them, as the importance of holding the position seems to be fully appreciated by our authorities.

REPORTS FROM FORT PEMBERTON.

MOBILE, Thursday, March 26.

The Jackson Appeal of the 24th inst. has the following:

FORT PEMBERTON, Saturday, March 21.

The occasional booming of cannon up the river tells us that our boys are after the Yankees.

The Chillicothe is almost a wreck. Her quarter-gunner's body has been found, killed by a shot from our heavy guns, after passing through the boat's iron wall.

REPORTS FROM CHATTANOOGA.

CHATTANOOGA, Wednesday, March 25.

All is quiet.

There has been no fighting since Mosby's engagement at Liberty.

The Federals still occupy Murfreesboro.

Our scouts are in Lebanon and are operating along the banks of the Cumberland, from Lebanon to Nashville.

Accounts from the north bank of the Cumberland report that the Yankees are destroying all farming implements and foraging the whole country.

The inhabitants are compelled to hide their provisions.

Five thousand Yankee infantry occupy Gallatin and the Louisville road is strongly guarded.

It is reported that the Yankees have destroyed the Stones River Railroad and the temporary bridges between Murfreesboro and Nashville.

AFFAIRS IN GEORGIA.

MILLEDGEVILLE, Ga., Wednesday, March 25.

The General Assembly, convened in extra session, was organized to-day.

Gov. BROWN sent in a message, in which he recommended the restriction of the cotton planting to a quarter of an acre to each hand, under a heavy penalty. He argues the necessity for this course, preventing the possible scarcity of provisions. He recommends that further restrictions be put upon the distillation of spirits, so as to prevent the use of potatoes, peas and dried peaches for that purpose. He opposes the incorporation of the Bonds of the Confederate States by Georgia, as calculated to impair the confidence of capitalists and injure the credit of the State at home and abroad. He says it could do the Confederacy no good. He recommends that Congress be requested to levy a tax to repay the interest on the whole debt, and to create a sinking fund to extinguish the whole debt gradually. He argues in favor of a cordial support of the Confederate Government and Administration. He recommends an increase of the salaries of the State officers, and destroy the Legislature to devise the best plan for furnishing laborers for the coast defences, and recommends that the State cars carry corn to the destitute portions of the State. He advises an amendment of the military laws, &c.

REPORTED EVACUATION OF PENSACOLA.

MOBILE, Wednesday, March 25.

Official intelligence has been received of the evacuation of Pensacola by the enemy. They now occupy our navy-yard and Forts Barrancas and Hyacinths. The garrison of the town, and all others that could be spared, have been sent to Gen. BRAGG.

REPORTS FROM SAVANNAH.

SAVANNAH, Thursday, March 26.

Two Captains and six privates, of the Forty-eighth New-York regiment, were captured by our men, yesterday morning while en route from Fort Pulaski to Gamboro.

A large lot of letters and papers were also captured.

The Yankees came three miles out of Jacksonville yesterday, burned a house and tore up several miles of railroad. We opened fire upon them and they hurried off.

They are coming out again to-day, and a considerable fight is expected.

FROM VICKSBURGH, VIA CAIRO.

Reported Landing of our Forces Above Haines' Bluff.

CAIRO, Saturday, March 28.

It is reported viâ Memphis that two divisions of our troops entered the Yazoo, viâ Sunflower River, and that they landed at Eagle Bend, just above Haines' Bluff, one and a quarter miles from the rebel fortifications.

OUR VICKSBURGH CORRESPONDENCE.

The Iron-Clad Lafayette—A Second Quaker Gunboat—The Rebels "Bold" Again.

NEAR VICKSBURGH, Miss., Thursday, March 12, 1863.

Three days ago, Gen. SHERMAN and Rear-Admiral POARTER went on board the Lafayette for the purpose of trying the range of her guns by a little practice upon Vicksburgh. About noon she was seen to leave her moorings in the Yazoo, and come down with her large ensign floating gally in the breeze. She made a short trip up the Mississippi, the Admiral's tug following, but scarcely being able to keep up with the new gunboat, which made better headway against the powerful current than any steamer of her class which has yet made her appearance in these waters. After proceeding a few miles above the mouth of the Yazoo, she turned short round, and steamed rapidly down toward the city. Having reached the vicinity of the canal, she again turned, with her head up stream, and dropped stern foremost down within range of the town, where she opened her powerful stern battery of Parrott guns upon the rebel stronghold, firing for half an hour in the direction of the Court-house, a very prominent building, situated nearly upon the crest of the hill, and in the centre of the town. Their firing was good, the one hundred pound shells exploding near the Court-house. It elicited no response, however, from the rebel batteries, the latter keeping silent and lying low, evidently for the purpose of drawing the formidable vessel nearer within their own range before opening upon her. Satisfied with the experiments, the Admiral went on board his tug, and the steamer returned again to her moorings in the Yazoo.

On the forenoon of the same day, a mysterious craft was observed lying near the gunboat Louisville, on the opposite side of the Mississippi, just in the mouth of the Yazoo. She was "long, low and black"—though not exactly a schooner. A long casemated hull, close down to the water; two extensive wheelhouses and two high smoke-pipes were the prominent objects which attracted attention. Some officers who came over reported that she was a newly-captured rebel gunboat which had just been taken up the Yazoo, and which had been partially sunk during a severe fight, and was being pumped out. Prompted by Yankee curiosity to see the captured mass-of-war's man, your correspondent crossed over, and took a survey of the unique craft. Upon close inspection she proved to be a very tolerable Quaker copy of the Lafayette. She was constructed by an ingenious and rollicking engineer, assisted by other officers and men attached to one of the gunboats. The purpose for which she was built was to send her past the Vicksburgh batteries to feel their fire. A raft of large logs constituted the hull, or foundation, about 150 feet long by 40 feet in width. The boards, slabs and joist required for her casemates and wheel-houses were taken from vacant secesh houses on the Louisiana side of the river. Her sides were sloped up to resemble the usual oblique iron-clads of this fleet, with large side-wheel houses. Two pramkins of pork and four barrels furnished an excellent substitute for a pair of very tall chimneys, under which were built smoldering fires, intended more for making smoke than steam. It required a close inspection, even by daylight, to distinguish them from the genuine smoke-stack. A barrel of coal tar furnished a pitchy black coating for her elaborate casemates and wheel-houses. One side of her ample paddle-boxes bore the inscription:

"CONFEDERATE MAIL PACKET NO. 1" and on the other was painted,

"SECESH SOLD"

From the forward flagstaff depended an expensive white cotton flag on which was a death's head and cross bones, with the figure-head of a Yankee smelling the end of his thumb and twirling his fingers in the air. Total expense of construction and equipment ten dollars.

Thus furnished forth

The fair—the perfidious bark,
Built i' the eclipse and—looking very dark,

was prepared to take her perilous way past the Vicksburgh batteries.

The night was as dark as Erebus, but there were occasional flashes of lightning which revealed momentary glimpses of floating objects, but leaving their distance and proportions in uncertainty. Toward midnight the moon rose sufficiently to afford light enough to make sure that the rebels would see her as she approached the town. The night was, therefore, most auspicious for "running the blockade." The visit of the Lafayette during the afternoon had no doubt inspired the rebel sentinels with increased vigilance. At midnight the Quaker gunboat was accordingly taken in tow, and with a pitchy smoke boiling out of her pork-barrel chimneys, she went a-fluking down the rapid current of the swollen river. Having puffed and tugged along to within a mile of the point opposite the town, so as to attract the attention of the batteries, the lines were cast of and she was committed to the current and to the tender mercies of the Vicksburghers. The crew of the tug now waited to breathlessness the effect of their work upon the batteries. In about three quarters of an hour, as she began to round the point of the Peninsula, there was a heavy volley of musketry heard, and immediately after it came a flash and booming of cannon. It was now evident that the formidable vessel was seen. In another moment a second and a third shot from still heavier guns reverberated in the still midnight air, waking the echoes all along the woody sides of the river. It is needless to observe that there was some excitement among the mischievous boys who had lent their aight's sleep in order to enjoy the joke. After some ten guns had been discharged, there was a pause in the firing, as if the imposture had been discovered; but the rebel gunners were only waiting for a flash of lightning to ascertain if they might perilest their aim. Shortly, one after another gun, heavier than the rest, sent their solid shot and screaming shell over the supposed Yankee gunboat. Each battery owned to win with the other for the honor of giving her the final shot, no doubt they heard their missiles glance off from her iron casemates. As the vessel floated down each battery in turn paid her a salute until every gun along the whole line of works as far as Warrenton paid their respects to the inoffensive and harmless rant. "I thought I should have died a laughing" said one of those wags, "to hear them pegging away at the old tub!" Another declared he wouldn't have lost the fun for ten dollars. They fired ninety-four shots!

The circumstance proves with what sleepless vigilance the rebels watch every movement we make.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC, Monday Evening, March 23, 1863.

Impressed, undoubtedly, with the belief that Gen. HOOKER contemplates an early attack, and at this point, the rebels have, during the week past, increased the force opposite by the addition of several regiments. Balloon reconnoissances have discovered the fact that troops are arriving constantly by rail from Richmond. One of the Generals so situated, that importance may be attached to his statements, estimates the rebel force opposite now at 160,000.

TUESDAY, March 24, 1863.

The following stirring Address by the Fifth Wisconsin regiment will be perused with national interest. Coming as it does from a command which has participated in nearly all the engagements of the Army of the Potomac since the first battle of Bull Run, it speaks in thunder-tones to the Copperheads at home who rely upon their former political associates, now absent in the field, to aid them in the nefarious work of destroying the Republic. The Address is signed by all the commissioned officers present with the regiment, and, when read to the men by Col. ALLEN, was received with vociferous applause. There was not a dissenting voice when the question was put upon its acceptance as an expression of the sentiments entertained by the regiment.

A VOICE FROM THE FIFTH WISCONSIN.

Whereas, Treason has raised its foul head in Wisconsin, has penetrated its legislative halls, and is endeavoring to defile, with its touch, the ermine of the Supreme Bench; Therefore, as soldiers battling for the unity of our country, for human liberty and the rights of all men, as patriots protecting all the rights of citizenship, and bound to home by all the ties of patriotism and consanguinity, we feel called upon in this hour of National peril and State dishonor, to enter our protest against the suicidal policy of traitors and sympathizers with treason at home.

Peace party men, stay at home patriots who are for peace upon other terms than the unconditional surrender of the rebels—valiant knights who fall fault with the imprisonment of Northern traitors, but have no blood to shed in defence of the flag that protected their infancy and imbecility, nor sympathy to express for soldiers in the field, are alike entitled to our scorn and contempt.

To demoralize the masses by crying peace, when the rebels scoff at the idea of reconciliation, to withhold supplies, to throw barriers in the way of enlistments, and to discourage those who have already offered their lives to their country, is to paralyze the arm of the President. To paralyze the arm of the President is to give victory to rebels in arms, to plot destruction for us, to invoke it upon themselves.

We have sworn "to bear true allegiance to the United States, to serve the Government honestly and faithfully against all its enemies or opposers whatsoever, and observe and obey the orders of the President," and we this day register the oath anew, that we will hold up his hands, abide by his proclamations and enforce obedience to the laws, avenge our brothers in arms, fallen upon many a bloody field, and fight the enemies of our flag wherever found and in whatever garb.

Citizens! Freemen! Brothers! Men of Wisconsin, are you going to desert us? Are you willing to purchase peace at the price of your manhood? Are you going to prove recreant to your obligations? For the sake of a brief period of inglorious ease to blast the hopes of posterity, to strike even one star from your National firmament?

Eighteen months since we left home with your prayers, your benedictions. Are you willing to see us returning with our flags trailing in the dust? You promised us that while battling for humanity, a common cause, a common country, you would succor our families and sustain us with your good wishes and your fortunes. We, therefore, ask that you countenance no opposition to the conduct of the war, that you sustain for places of public trust no man who is not heart and soul with us in this business of right with wrong, that you support the laws—that you stand by the Government against which traitors in arms are arrayed—stand by your country in its hour of peril—say, more, we can demand it.

In conclusion let us say, that we are in for the war; that we are confident of the righteousness of our cause, and of speedy and final success, and that those who oppose us, whether by word or deed, are traitors to their country, and worthy only of a traitor's doom.

LATEST REPORTS FROM HEADQUARTERS.

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY OF THE POTOMAC, Saturday, March 28.

Deserters brought into camp to-day confirm the previous reports of the great scarcity of provisions in the rebel camp, but says this does not dampen the ardor and spirit of the troops.

Owing to the strictness of the rebel conscription in the Shenandoah Valley it is highly probable that fertile and productive portion of the State will be nearly a barren waste the coming season.

Other portions of the State are believed to be in the same condition.

AMERICAN TOPICS.

IMPORTANT DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENCE.

From the Manchester Guardian, March 14.

On Thursday, three series of diplomatic correspondence on the affairs of North America were published as Parliamentary Papers. The first of these consists of letters and dispatches between Earl RUSSELL, on the one part, and Lord LYONS, and, during his absence from Washington, Mr. STORER, on the other part. Most of the letters refer to cotton, the extent of the supply, and the impediments to trade in that article; others refer to the protection of British subjects, particularly against drafting, and occasionally to the internal politics of the Union, and the progress of the war. There is at page 41 a letter from Lord LYONS, written just after the successes of the Democratic party in the elections, in which he states that several leaders of that party had sought interviews with him, and told him that a proposal of foreign intervention at that time was inopportune, and would weaken them and strengthen the war party. He remarks that before the elections an inclination to a peace policy was so ill received that a strong declaration in favor of war was thought necessary by the Democratic leaders, who accordingly were at the date of his letter, clamoring for a more vigorous prosecution of hostilities. Referring to the opinions of those who recommend mediation as preliminary to the recognition of the Southern Government, Lord LYONS says: "I do not clearly understand what advantage is expected to result from a mere recognition; and I presume the European Powers do not contemplate breaking the blockade by force of arms, or engaging in hostilities with the United States in support of the independence of the South." With reference to the apprehensions of an attack on Canada in the event of a reconstruction of the Union, Lord LYONS writes: "If the reconstruction be still possible, I do not think we need conclude that it would lead to an invasion of Canada, or to any consequences injurious to Great Britain."

On the 13th January, Lord LYONS writes from Washington on the general state of political parties in America. He says:

"The terms of service of a very large portion of the present army expire in the Spring or in the early Summer. If the present state of feeling continues, very few of the men will reenlist; fresh volunteers will not present themselves, and to enforce a large compulsory draft will be impossible. Already desertions are very frequent; they would, it is said, be much more so, did not men remain in hopes of soon receiving the large arrears of pay due to them. It was stated the other day in Congress that somewhat more than one-fourth of the officers were absent from their regiments, some with, many without, leave. The Emancipation Proclamation had disgusted many; it has made still more doubt the possibility of any other result to the war, whenever it may end, than separation. Nor is the one great advantage which the Republican party has—that of holding the Executive power—turned by them to the best account. The unpopularity and the failure of the Administration recoil upon its supporters, and they in their turn weaken the Administration by manifesting their discontent with it. The attack made upon the Cabinet by the Republican Senators has no doubt damaged it very much. Nor is the effect of it allowed to subside. It is pursued in the newspapers; indeed, yesterday, the text of the resolutions pressing the President to change his Cabinet was published in one of the Washington journals. Besides these party troubles, there is in some of the Western States, and especially in Indiana and Illinois, a discontent which passes upon apprehensions of even more than constitutional opposition. To add to all this, the state of the finances is becoming really alarming. The pay of the army is six months in arrear. The Democratic party seeks to profit by the difficulties of its opponents, without committing itself to any very definite policy. Thus it attacks the arbitrary arrests and the other extra legal measures of the Cabinet, and, above all, the military Administration; but it does not risk its own popularity by declaring against the war, or pronouncing the word 'separation.' Its leaders know that it is felt to be the peace party, and that it really gets all the votes of those who desire peace. They will not incur the danger of losing other votes by avowing a desire for peace themselves. They desire to throw on the Republicans all the responsibility of any unpopular measures which may become necessary. Foreign mediation is not likely to be acceptable to the people at large, and the Democrats would be very glad to escape all share of the responsibility of having recourse to it. According to present appearances, the difficulty of keeping up the numerical force of the army would seem to be the most probable cause of peace. Great military successes might, however, revive the warlike spirit, and an invasion by the Confederates of the Northern States would probably induce great numbers of volunteers to enlist for a short period to defend their homes. There is nothing at present—a clear intuition of that there is likely to be, in the meantime, a complicated attack foreign Powers may step in with propriety and effect to put a stop to the effusion of blood."

The second collection of papers is a correspondence between Earl RUSSELL and Mr. MASON, extending over the period between April, 1862, and the end of last month. Mr. MASON's letters urge the Government to recognize the Confederate States, and to break the blockade. He goes into long arguments on International law; but most of Earl Russell's replies are more courteous (whatever else may be said of them) received his communications. On the 24 of August, however, Earl RUSSELL wrote:

"In the face of the astounding events of the war; the alternations of victory and defeat; the capture of New-Orleans; the advance of the Federals to Corinth, to Memphis, and the banks of the Mississippi, as far as Vicksburgh, contrasted, on the other hand, with the failure of the attack on Charleston, and the retreat from before Richmond; placed, too, between allegations so contradictory on the part of the contending Powers—Her Majesty's Government is still determined to wait."

In the beginning of this year, Mr. MASON addressed to the Foreign Office a letter merely dated "January, 1863," in which he objects to the views of the English Government on the subject of blockade. In reply to this, Earl RUSSELL writes:

"I have, in the first place, to assure you that Her Majesty's Government would much regret if you should feel that any want of respect was intended by the circumstance of a mere acknowledgment of your letter having hitherto been addressed to you. With regard to the question contained in it, I have to say that Her Majesty's Government see no reason to quality the language employed in my dispatch to Lord LYONS of the 15th February last. It appears to Her Majesty's Government to be sufficiently clear that the Declaration of Paris could not be intended to mean that a port must be so blockaded as really to prevent access in all winds, and independently of whether the communication which might be carried on in a dark night, or by means of small low steamers or coasting craft creeping along the shore; in short, that it was necessary that communication with a port under blockade should be utterly and absolutely impossible under any circumstances.

In further illustration of this remark, I may say there is no doubt that a blockade would be in legal existence although a sudden storm or change of wind occasionally blew off the blockading squadron. This is a change to which, in the nature of things, every blockade is liable. Such an accident does not suspend, much less break, a blockade. Whereas, on the contrary, the driving off a blockading force by a superior force, does not break a blockade, which must be renewed de novo, in the usual form, to be binding upon neutrals. The declaration of Paris was, in truth, directed against what were called 'paper blockades;' that is, blockades not sustained by any actual force, or sustained by a notoriously inadequate naval force, such as the occasional appearance of a man-of-war in the offing, or the like. The adequacy of the force to maintain the blockade must, indeed, always to a certain extent, be one of fact and evidence; but it does not appear that in any of the numerous cases brought before the Prize Courts in America, the inadequacy of the force has been urged by those who would have been most interested in urging it against the legality of the seizure. The interpretation, therefore, placed by Her Majesty's Government on the declaration of Paris was that a blockade, in order to be respected by neutrals, must be practically effective. At the time I wrote my dispatch to Lord LYONS, Her Majesty's Government were of opinion that the blockade of the Southern ports could not be otherwise than so regarded; and certainly the manner in which it has since been enforced gives to neutral Governments no excuse for asserting that the blockade has not been efficiently maintained. It is proper to add that the same view of the meaning and effect of the article of the declaration of Paris on the subject of blockades which is above explained was taken by the representative of the United States at the Court of St. James (Mr. DALLAS), during the communications which passed between the two Governments some years before the present war, with a view to the accession of the United States to that declaration."

The third series contains the correspondence which has passed between Mr. ADAMS, the American Minister, and the Foreign Office in respect to the Alabama. Much of this correspondence has already been published. In a letter, dated Jan. 24, Earl RUSSELL concludes that the Government have in no way allowed a breach of the law which they were able to prevent, and says the American Government have themselves done what is questionable in seeking to induce British subjects to engage in war on the Federal side. Mr. ADAMS, in reply, dated Jan. 26, (the last of the series,) says:

"If I understand your Lordship aright, it is now affirmed that because the Government offers large bounties on enlistment in the United States, and because British subjects in the United States, tempted by these bounties, do occasionally enlist, therefore your Lordship is justified in having affirmed in your former note that the Government of the United States systematically and in disregard of the comity of nations induce them to enlist. As well might I in my turn, in view of the frequent applications made to me to procure the discharge of citizens of the United States who have been tempted in the same manner to enlist in Her Majesty's service in this kingdom, assume the existence of a similar policy."

COMMENTS OF THE PRESS.

From the London Times, March 14.

The diplomatic correspondence referring to the latest incidents of the American war, which was printed last night, represents our Foreign Secretary in a position not so novel as it is perplexing.

The representatives of the United States and the Southern Confederacy, Mr. ADAMS and Mr. MASON, have played the part of the rival influences, and Lord RUSSELL has been compelled by official necessities to listen cautiously and reply prudently to both. The arguments, representations, and remonstrance of the opposite advocates are earnest and elaborate. They prove that each thought the choice between them, and the reasons that ought to have determined it were obvious and self-evident. In reality, to side with either was utterly impossible, and the courteous but firm refusal to commit the Government and the country in any way on the questions at issue has left both parties disappointed by our neutrality. That disappointment is not without a tinge of angry feeling, but when time has brought about the great results that are impending, we hope a calmer judgment than we can appeal to at present will acknowledge that the steady neutrality of the policy of England has been the wisest that could have been pursued. That it has not been adopted in a spirit of sulkiness, that we have suffered by the continuance of the conflict sufficiently proves. We have refrained from buying a present advantage by an interference that for generations to come would have been made a ground for accusation or reproach.

The irritation that may be traced in nearly an equal degree in both divisions of the last correspondence, North and South, is of itself a proof that we have not unduly inclined to either side. This is precisely the point on which a neutral Power is likely to differ in opinion from two enraged belligerents. Mr. MASON urges the English Government to declare the blockade of the ports of the South a nullity, or not to respect it, because it can be shown that the North has not been able to render it complete and total. Some ships have sailed in and out of those ports, but many have also been captured in attempting to pass, and as these incidents are common to all blockades, the Foreign Secretary refuses to declare that of the Southern coast as not existing because it is not perfect. It is only excessive laxity on the part of the belligerent who is bound to vigilance that can legally raise a blockade; and the difficulty of all communication by sea with the Southern States proves that the Northern naval commanders have not shown any evident want of force, or remissness in the discharge of their duty. The refusal of Mr. MASON's application, which a strict neutrality compels us to give, is the cause of the dissatisfaction of the South. That of the North has another reason.

We have done too little to satisfy the Federal Government in the case of the Alabama. Because that vessel was built in an English port we are made responsible for all the incidents of her once quasi career. Such a position we might be content of a breach of neutrality has been forcibly imposed on us. The Alabama has been hunted like the Wee Willie or the Red Rover, or any of the marvelous ships of salt-water romance, we are not answerable for her achievements. The shift and daring that rendered one vessel an embarrassment to a great naval Power were certainly supplied by the South. The Federal Government might have bought a score of Alabamas on the same terms and with the same risk. The long man hunt is contravention of the Queen's proclamation. It was an illegal and contraband transaction, and was colored by all the arts and precautions that interpret, when it engages in that kind of business, has always at its command. The Federal Government has never yet had to manage a system of Excise duties or maintain a coastguard against smuggling. When the war debt and a high commercial tariff have made detection of fraud and repressing a contraband trade matters of experience, it will learn what kind of work private enterprise can cut out for an Executive. When suspend into action by large profits, private enterprise can dispose facilities for concealment, and measures that would put the eyes of Argus at defiance. A belligerent Power must maintain the police of the seas in its own coast. A neutral cannot and is not bound by the law of nations to transfer any part of that duty to its own ports and harbors. This is, in effect, what Mr. ADAMS throughout this correspondence complains that we have not done. But really, the complaint only amounts to this—that we have treated both parties to the war in precisely the same manner. We declared the sale of arms and warlike stores to either of them illegal. We withdrew from the traffic in such supplies all the protection and encouragement given to regular trade. Britain took no taking part in such contraband business, but felt all right of appeal or protest against the seizure and destruction of their property if captured by the enemy. We could do no more. What Mr. ADAMS requires of a neutral Power is that we should allow the North to buy unlimited quantities of arms of all kinds, but prohibit the purchase of all such stores by the South. Our neutrality ought to have been shown by giving a decided advantage to one party. The Federalists needed no object lesson in the waste of war and, and immense resources of its own, out of which to build or charter a formidable fleet. What it did want for its war service it bought and, having the control of the sea, transported without risk. The Southern States had no ships, and in the same way, bought them. But we believe the amount of money the North have spent in England in the material of war far exceeds all the funds the South could devote for the same purpose. It is the use that has been made of the Alabama, not her origin, that has rendered her dangerous, and for this we are not in any way responsible. If a man is run through with a sword he may with more justice attribute the mischance to his adversary's skill, or a fencer than to the distant workman who forged the blade. The Alabama derived nothing from the locality of her construction that was not purchasable with mere money. The qualities she afterwards displayed were not of our supplying. Perhaps they are of a kind that money cannot buy. But that is a question beyond the reach of diplomacy. It underlies much of this correspondence, but could not be broached in it.

CAPTURE OF THE BARK SPRINGBOK.

In a letter to the Liverpool Mercury, the Captain of the British ship Springbok details the circumstances under which his ship was captured by the Federal gunboat Sonoma. He says: "I left Falmouth for Nassau on the 23d December, 1862. On the 24 of February, in latitude 25° 36' north, longitude 72° 40' west, steering to the west under all plain sail, we were hailed by an American war vessel and ordered to heave to, which I immediately did. An officer from her then came on board and demanded the ship's papers, which I at once produced. He then desired me to take them all with me and proceed on board his vessel with him, and on arriving there I handed over every paper I had relating to ship and cargo. The Captain said the manifest did correspond with the contents of the cases, bales and packages, and asked me if I had any invoices of the cargo, and also if I knew of what it consisted. I told him that to the best of my belief it was an assorted general cargo, consisting chiefly of Manchester goods, but of what description I did not know. He then said he should seize and make a prize of my vessel and cargo. I told him I was much surprised at the step he had taken, as I could see no cause for it; but he said he did, and that he should take all the ship's papers, and that I must consider myself a prisoner for the time being. A prize crew was then sent up to take the vessel to New-York. I was kept on the gunboat till 11 P. M., and then sent to my own cabin with a prisoner's mate, and a crew of six men, armed with revolvers, rifles and side-arms. The crew of my vessel were then mustered and told the vessel was a prize, and asked whether they would assist in working her to port, or go on board the gunboat, when they at once and unanimously decided to stay by the ship, and we bore away for New-York. We arrived at New-York on the 11th of February, and all hands kept on board till the following day, when myself and crew were taken in custody to the United States Marshal's office and there ordered to the House of Detention. I asked to be allowed to see the British Consul, when I was told I could see no one until I had been examined by the Prize Commissioners. We were kept as close prisoners in the House of Detention for two days, and in the meantime I asked permission to write to the British Consul, and was allowed to do so, and was told my letter would be safely sent through the Marshal's office, and I have since learned from the Consul that he never received it. When released I returned to my vessel, and found that my cabin had been ransacked, the staterooms broken open, and the chronometer and all the nautical instruments taken away. My vessel was 200 miles east of Nassau, New-Providence, when taken possession of."

SHIPBUILDING FOR THE CONFEDERATES.

The following letter from the Foreign Office has been received by Mr. THOMAS B. POTTER, President of the Union and Emancipation Society, respecting the building of war vessels for the Confederates, similar to the Alabama:

FOREIGN OFFICE, March 11, 1863.

"SIR: I am directed by Earl RUSSELL to acknowledge the receipt of the copy, signed by you, of a resolution of the executive of the Union and Emancipation Society of Manchester, dated the 3d inst., in which that Society records its protest against the building and fitting out in this country of armed vessels for the Government of the so-styled Confederate States, and call upon Parliament and her Majesty's Government to put an effectual stop to such proceedings.

I am, in reply, to request that you will call the attention of the executive of the society to the provisions of the Act 59 George III., cap. 69. It will be observed in that act that evidence on oath is required to enable proceedings to be taken against persons charged with contravening it.

I am, Sir, your most obedient, humble servant,

(Signed) E. HAMMOND.

Thomas B. Potter, Esq., President of the Union and Emancipation Society of Manchester, No. 51 Piccadilly, Manchester."

THE GREAT WEDDING.

THE CASUALTIES.

All the London journals have their long columns full of reports of the inquests upon the unfortunate victims of the rush and crush in the streets on the day and evening of the wedding, and editorially they comment with much severity upon the inefficiency of the police. These are some of the painful incidents testified to:

An inquest was held on the bodies of four more of the persons killed on the night of the illuminations in London. The names of the deceased were Caroline Mitchell, Anne Harding, Ellen Giles and Elizabeth Grove. Mr. GRAHAM, a coachbuilder, said he was passing down Ludgate Hill on Tuesday night, and when opposite the Old Bailey he found a very large crowd, so that the circulation was impeded. Whenever an opportunity presented itself people passed and repassed each other. Scattered between the Old Bailey and Farringdon street his attention was called to a young woman struggling in the crush. It was the sister of the deceased CAROLINE MITCHELL. He got her out, and placed her in a doorway. She described her sister, and he went after her. He went up the Belle Sauvage Yard, and about 50 yards from the entrance he found the deceased lying on her back on the pavement. There was a crowd round her, simply gazing upon her in bewilderment. She was pronounced to be dead. Verdicts of "Accidental deaths" were returned in all cases. On Thursday, an inquest was held on the body of an infant, two months old, one of the victims of the great crush. The mother said that on the evening in question she took the deceased out with her as she was going to the city to see the illuminations. Witness was accompanied by a young woman and a man. When they got to King William-street they turned toward London Bridge to go and see the monument, and there was a great crowd and crush. Witness did not notice that the child was particularly pressed against, but upon looking at it, she found that it was black in the face, and was gasping. They made their way out of the crowd, but the child was dead. The jury returned a verdict "That the deceased, being an infant of tender age, was suffocated in his mother's arms by the pressure of the crowd in the public streets."

A communication to the Star describes the manner in which most of these unfortunates were killed. The writer, describing the scene in Princess-street, says:

"The people appeared peaceful and quiet, in unison with their wives enjoying quietly the sight of the illuminations. All at once I heard a great screaming, whistling, and shouting, and on looking back I saw a set of ruffians (more properly ruffians) of the lowest class, bedizened with rosettes, wearing false beards and moustaches, charging with a rush on the dense portion of the crowd. The foremost of leader of the gang carried the frame of an umbrella,

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

MEDITATIONS ON DEATH AND ETERNITY. A Translation from the German, by FREDERICA ROWAN.

The original of this work is a well-known German book entitled Stunden der Andacht, the authorship of which is in doubt, though generally ascribed to ZSCHOKKE. The Meditations, though upon subjects not generally or sufficiently dwelt upon, are tenderly expressed and filled with the most absolute consolation for those in dread of the unknown land, or to whose hearts sorrow has come near. The circumstances under which the book was published in England are peculiarly touching. The original translations were ordered by the late Prince Consort for the Queen, with both of whom the subject matter possessed great interest. Upon the death of Prince ALBERT, Her Majesty directed a public issue of the Meditations, that the balm which served to soothe the sorrows of a royal heart might be of more enlarged service among her people. It is published in Boston by TICKNOR & FIELDS, and is for sale in this City by SHELDON & Co.

THE WORDS OF THE LORD JESUS. By RUDOLPH STIER, D. D. Translated from the Second Revised and Enlarged German edition, by Rev. WM. B. POPE, Manchester; Revised by JAMES STRONG, S. T. D., and HENRY B. SMITH, D. D., Professor in Union Theological Seminary. Part I. 8vo., pp. 344. New-York: Pastor's Library Association.

The clergy will hail the appearance of the best of modern commentaries in this compact and cheap form—and so, in fact, ought every intelligent Christian layman. There is no great display of learning in the work, but every page is enriched with the digested results of learning, in combination with sound sense, practical wisdom and fervent piety. The translation is admirable—retaining all the vividness and point of the original. The series, when completed, must occupy one of the foremost places in every Christian library.

THE IRON FURNACE; OR, SLAVERY AND SECESSION. By Rev. JOHN H. AUGHEY.

Mr. AUGHEY writes of matters concerning which he is entirely familiar. Long residence in the State of Mississippi afforded him ample means of information concerning the workings toward secession; while his subsequent sufferings in the cause of the Union, his persecutions, losses and personal danger, left little for him to learn of the outrages and indignities which were heaped upon every citizen of the sunny South who dared raise voice or hand against the rebellion of the slaveholders. Mr. AUGHEY'S account possesses all the interest of personality, with all the charm of a practiced writer. WM. S. & ALFRED MARTIEN, Philadelphia, are the publishers of the work, which is sold here by A. S. BARNES & Co.

SPEECE AND SPLASHES; OR, DESULTORY RECOLLECTIONS OF TOWN AND COUNTRY. By HENRY MORFORD.

NOTES CRITICISMS AND CORRESPONDENCE UPON SHAKESPEARE'S PLAYS AND ACTORS. By JAMES HENRY HACKETT. New-York: CARLETON, 1863.

SHAKESPEARE has had a host of commentators, troops of critics, but only a few interpreters. The self-sufficient MALONE and the stately JOHNSON, among the first class, and the esthetical SCHLEGEL and the acute HAZLITT among the second, will readily recur to mind. We make no allusion to the coterie of writers on the Bard who are either perpetually clipping his language with etomological scissors, or inflating it with rhetorical bellows—such an one was COLLIER. But your interpreter of the emperor among dramatists can only be found in the ranks of the actors or (to go back to a good old Saxon word) players. Some of the latter have lazily studied the commentators, or drearily followed the critics, and they have failed in strength of impersonation. But those of them who studied the text of SHAKESPEARE with that conscious care of attention which a lawyer employs over the hidden intricacies of a puzzling will, or which an early father of the Church used over Sacred History and Biblical literature, have accomplished a twofold success. First, in adding to the fame of the great Bard; and secondly, in better establishing their own excellence as Shakespearian actors. Mr. HACKETT ranks with the last named. He is an interpreter of SHAKESPEARE, and has rarely succeeded in not bestowing intelligence upon his readers by the book. This may seem a negative compliment; but, rightly viewed, it is far otherwise. The world of belles lettres has been so feasted with views on SHAKESPEARE, that he who can read new ones and rise from their perusal with a sense of satisfaction, gives more real praise to the author than if the latter had stunned him with commentation or amazed him with a novel critique.

Mr. HACKETT will go down in histrionic fame as the great impersonation of Falstaff, and therefore we select this character to say that his Merry Knight has been such an unbounded success, because all who saw and heard felt that not Mr. HACKETT was behind the footlights—HACKETT, the gentleman by birth; HACKETT, their quondam mercantile acquaintance; HACKETT, the delight of society; HACKETT, the worshiping husband, indulgent parent and generous friend—but the very confidence man and quintessence of all vices of the Elizabethan age, who had slept a Rip Van Winkle slumber, to be aroused by the American actor in question, and introduced to the new World just as SHAKESPEARE drew him, and not a hair taller nor a stocking thinness the shorter! We remember well, in boy-time, meeting HACKETT in society and wondering how that perfect gentleman could so metamorphose himself into Falstaff. The thought was of itself an eulogy. Naturally, therefore, the actor who could so imbue himself with the dramatic characteristics of one of SHAKESPEARE'S most difficult creations can very well interpret some of his personages, taken from history or romance.

The book before us abounds in the work of both commentator and critic; but is the result of intuition. The author has evidently tested his own views as a philosopher tests his discoveries—not always on the public stage, but certainly in that private one which exists in the actor's closet as much as a laboratory exists in the apartments of the chemist. The personal experiences and recollections plentifully scattered through our author's pages, (but not in any cases unpleasant from egotism,) show us how these tests were made from time to time. Mr. HACKETT, however, has not perfectly finished every upon Hamlet's soliloquy on suicide, and it is original. This is saying enough, considering how hackneyed is the theme. It is analytical—which is saying much, considering how easy it was to take up old theories or opinions, and to demolish them without substantiating anything a new structure. The notes upon King Lear will prove an agreeable addition to dramatic literature, for they touch upon those hidden beauties and those salient points for action which would fetch the color and wholly escape the mere critic. The author then takes up the different actors of "Hamlet," and gives to us piquant and tolerably accurate sketches of their persons and habits, and criticisms or defects. Actors are not always generous towards each other, but, in the main, none of the contemporaries of Mr. HACKETT can find fault with his frankness and critical disposition to say the best things of them. As the years roll by and they pass into historical associations, the library possessing these reminiscences of Mr. HACKETT will have a valuable appendix for answering "queries." Mr. HACKETT finally enriches his pages with most interesting correspondence upon Shakesperian subjects. The correspondence is from and with Ex-President QUINCY ADAMS, WASHINGTON IRVING—the Knickerbocker-of-all—the author of Ion, etc., etc. Familiar intermingling relieves criticism of the usual pomp and make-up for critical war reading which is ever pleasant. It is thus in our author's volume. So that when [illegible] intelligent interpretation, including just criticism and candid comment, valuable references to contemporaneous theatrical events and actors, and suggestive hints upon nearly all Shakespearian subjects. Mr. HACKETT'S book is a very valuable one, and we have no doubt its library consumption will give life to its back would at first indicate. We heard a friend recommend it to a scholar as "Hackett's Shakesperian Lunch." E.

SOUTH AMERICA.

Prosperous State of Affairs in Peru—The French Stopping the Slave Trade—Chili Quiet—From the Argentine Republic—The Legislative Assembly Dissolved by Force.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PANAMA, Monday, March 16, 1863.

The British mail steamer Callao arrived at Panama on the 6th inst., from South American ports. Her dates from Valparaiso and Santiago de Chili are to the 17th and from Callao and Lima to the 27th February. There is nothing new from Ecuador. The Callao brought $170,501 50 for Southampton; for New-York, 40 bales goat skins, 19 bales hair, 14 bales wool and 1,100 hides; for San Francisco, 10 packages chaucara; for Southampton, 152 cerrones bark, 17 packages merchandise; for Liverpool, 540 bales cotton, 170 bales wool, 22 cerrones bark, 6 bales india-rubber; for Panama, 500 sacks flour, 12 packages merchandise, and $3,760 20 in specie.

PERU.

The country continues to prosper under the new administration of Gen. SAN ROMAN, because the capitalists and merchants have no fear of either foreign wars or revolutions.

The excellent new currency law has just been promulgated. The present Bolivian coin, which constitutes the greater part of the circulation, is in future to represent about its true value, 60 cents, as compared with the new coin. Gold ounces or doubloons are in future to represent $20 25 of the base coin. Thirty-one merchants of Lima, who cannot see beyond their own noses, held a meeting and denounced the new system.

The French authorities in the Polynesian have at last put their threat in force, to arrest the infamous new slave trade that was instituted by a company of Callao merchants, that of stealing the poor natives and bringing them to Peru to be worked to death on the cotton, sugar and rice lands. Several Peruvian vessels were seized in the Polynesian ports, and were only released on their promising to abandon the heartless trade. These simple people, who have never known any restraint, and who gain at home their livelihood in an exceedingly easy manner, going nearly naked and living on fish and fruits, when put to hard labor at once on their arrival in Peru, working from sunrise to sunset, die in such numbers and with such rapidity that scarcely a quarter part of some of the first cargoes, introduced only six months since, are now alive.

CHILI.

There is nothing of very great interest from Chili. The newspapers are discussing the subject of religious toleration. Chili has advanced but little in this idea when the general progress of the people toward liberty is taken into consideration, and the bulk of the interior population are much opposed to the introduction of "heretics" of any kind. All sects are allowed to worship according to their own creed, but all are more or less at the mercy of the Government, and are liable to have their privileges abridged if the Minister of Worship and Public Instruction should happen to be a fanatic. It is now proposed to accord religious toleration not only as a privilege, but as a right.

Don RAMON S. VALDES has been appointed Chilian Chargé d'Affaires to Mexico, and Señor ARAMBURARA will return to Washington.

The building of railroads is making rapid progress. In the South great advantages are expected from railway communications.

In Concepcion four criminals had been shot. In Santiago the mortality had been very great in the month of January, 1,650 deaths in a population of 100,000. Of these 609 were children.

A slight animation had been experienced in all branches of business in Valparaiso the past fortnight. The exportations, chiefly in Wheat, had been of some importance, and the abundance of the present harvest, it is expected, will create a good deal of activity in the shipping line. The rates of interest and discount remain the same. Money is abundant, but is only to be had on the very best of names. Consumers of cotton goods have at last been obliged to purchase, causing a considerable activity in this branch of trade. It is noted that prices are lower in second hands than in first, in many cases.

Flour is held at from $6 50 to $6 10 per quintal, 6 and 9 months. It is believed that a good deal will be exported to England, but prices must first range lower.

Bar Copper is sold at $16 50, cash.

American Lard is in demand.

Freights to England and Hamburg are £2 10s. and £2 15s. To the United States $12.

Exchange on London, 60 and 90 days, 45d. to 45½d. per dollar. On France 4f. 65c. to 4f. 75c. On United States, nominal.

ARGENTINE REPUBLIC.

Dates from Mendoza to Feb. 9, mention some disturbances in that Province. The Governor had dissolved the Legislative Assembly by force of arms. On the same promise a decree has been issued fixing death as the irremissible punishment for robbing three or more heads of cattle from the pampas, or one or more from the farms, for stealing any goods in value exceeding $25; for fraudulent bankruptcy and for concealing any thief or assisting him in his misdeeds.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

BUENOS AYRES, S. A., Monday, Jan. 26, 1863.

We are as much moved here by the news from the United States as though we were a dependency of that Government. Especially is this true in our commercial and political circles. The carrying trade of all nations is affected, and the state of Exchange is a direct result of affairs at the seat of war. Once we could procure gold in New-York in any quantity; now we are cast up to the use of the limited amount that is current here. Recently this stringency has been severely felt, and the value of our currency is at the mercy of a small number of wealthy men.

From this position of affairs we look for escape to the suppression of the rebellion, and the return of commerce to its wonted channels, to the efforts of statesmen here to fix the value of paper, and to the working of the rich mines of gold and silver recently opened in the Province of San Juan. To develop these mines there has been formed a joint stock company, composed of some of the most enterprising capitalists of this country. The project also meets the cordial encouragement of the Government.

In the Province of Rioja there has been lately discovered a petroleum spring, and scientific men believe that Rioja is as rich in that singular product as is Pennsylvania. Its great want here is workmen. There are demands in agricultural and mining business in this country for the hands of laborers.

It was especially pleasant, a few days ago, to see a young gentleman embark for the United States, to offer his services to the General Government. Young Maj. THE NEW-YORK DEMOCRATS.

We are not at all surprised at the delicacy with which the Northern Democrats have vaulted upon their position of quasi opposition to the war to a fervent support of Abraham Lincoln and his Stars and Stripes. We expressed at the time our conviction that not the slightest confidence was to be put in anything they might say or do. JOHN VAN BUREN, in particular, was beaten by the most emphatic popular election that ever New-York saw, (with the single exception of W. H. Seward,) and he could not be the legitimate son of MARCY, unless he was perfectly servilable in every word and action. It is a matter of little importance, however, what they may say or do. They cannot be more vilified than they were at the beginning of the war; more servilous and latent on emancipation. We fear their arms less than their arts. They have been conspicuous also among whatever may have invaded Virginia, and a like fate, we verily believe, awaits them in the future. They may howl themselves hoarse about their Stars and Stripes, assume themselves by cotton, rice and tobacco; we will accommodate them with those three articles, if they will only say that as they may longer; they deserve no one; they only add the guilt of hypocrisy to their other innumerable crimes.

We are presently to see New-York make another gigantic struggle for its preservation of her commercial supremacy. Perhaps she is beginning to see that if the rebellion, as her new-born servant, fails in its successful, the West will secede, and then what will become of the Babylon of America? Heaven grant that her worst apprehensions may be realized!

We are requested to say that the names of Messrs. GEORGE W. MCLEAN and HOWARD LAWRENCE are embraced in the list of corporators for the New Exchange in the bill presented a few days since to the Legislature, without their authority or knowledge.

Mr. T. QUICK, of the firm of QUICK & VAN BUSKIRK, has been admitted a member of the regular Stock Exchange Board.

The New-Bedford Mercury, of the 27th inst., says:

The ships Hudson and Corinthian, Scotland, from the Pacific, and the bark Oceanic 2d, from the Indian Ocean, arrived at this port, yesterday, bringing aggregate amounting to 2,670 barrels of sperm and 850 barrels of whale oil. The value of the sperm is at least $183,500, and that of the whale nearly $6,000. These vessels have been absent between three and four years, and have made, at the above moderate figures for oil, very satisfactory voyages.

A circular has been issued by certain leading receivers of State flour in this City, to the millers of the State, calling a Convention of millers, to meet at Rochester, on the 10th of April, for the purpose of taking action in relation to the course pursued by the Flour Inspectors. It is claimed that the Inspectors have been guilty of all sorts of abuses of their office, by which the interests of the millers have severely suffered. The Rochester Union, in giving this circular a place in its columns, prefaces it with the following appreciatory remarks:

"The course adopted by the Board of Flour Inspectors in New-York has been such of late as to work disastrously to the interests of millers, and a movement is now on foot to organize a new Board, which promises to have the hearty cooperation of the millers in this section of the State, as it certainly should. The millers have rights which should be respected, and which they will maintain. Such absurd restrictions in the matter of inspection as are calculated to cross their business or change its whole character, it is proper that they should act in self-defence. We hope the movement will be successful, and have no doubt but it will."

The following correspondence in reference to the Five-Twenties Loan will be found of interest to all who may have money to invest at the present time. The new loan is in great demand among all classes; and its character and advantages are set forth in the reply of Messrs. COOKE & Co.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE REBELLION.

The only news we have from Vicksburgh and vicinity this morning is rebel news, and if at all to be credited upon, it is certainly bad enough. One of our gunboats, in attempting to pass the rebel batteries at Vicksburgh, is said to have been sunk with all on board, while another was very badly damaged. The new expedition to the Yazoo is said to have met a check, and to have been turned back. We prefer to wait for our own advices before deciding how much reliance to place on these reports.

Our correspondent with the Army of the Potomac, it will be seen, sends us intelligence regarding the movements of the rebels on the other side of the Rappahannock which does not coincide with the advices received from Washington. He states that during the week past they have, so far from falling back from the river, been increasing their forces by the addition of several regiments, and that balloon reconnoissances have established the fact that troops are arriving constantly by rail from Richmond. One of our Generals with the Army of the Potomac estimates the number of the rebel army opposite at 100,000.

Regarding the rebel movements in Kentucky, the Louisville Journal says: "It would not be proper for us to state the reasons which back our belief, but we are clearly of the opinion that the rebel force in Kentucky will not only not make an advance upon Louisville, but they will not even make a serious demonstration in this direction. Without the rebel force is more formidable than we have reason to believe it to be, such a movement would be fatal to the entire command."

We have advices from South Carolina to Thursday last, by an arrival at Fortress Monroe. Up to that time no important movement had been made by our fleet.

The Navy Department has received positive intelligence of the destruction of the new rebel steamer Georgiana, off Long Island Beach, S. C., by our fleet. She was a powerful steamer, of 407 tons burden, and 150-horse power, and was considered more formidable than the Alabama. She left Liverpool on the 21st of January, and has since been at Nassau, N. P., fitting out to prey upon Northern commerce. She had two guns already mounted when she arrived there.

The prize steamer Peterhoff, captured by the Vanderbilt, arrived at this port, yesterday, from Key West. Her officers report having heard cannonading in the neighborhood of Charleston, but it is thought to have been only target firing.

The Washington Star, of Friday, states that no more passes are to be granted to visitors to the Army of the Potomac.

THE STATE LEGISLATURE.

In the Senate, yesterday, a bill to provide a bounty for conscripts was reported favorably. A majority report was made in favor of allowing soldiers in the service of the United States to vote. The Broadway Railroad bill was considered. A motion prohibiting the operation of the road on Sundays was adopted. The amendment proposed by Mr. PRUYN, that the Governor and Senate appoint five Commissioners to build the road, and that the surplus profits be devoted to the Central Park and Croton Water Departments, was lost.

In the Assembly, the bill fixing the compensation of the members of the New-York Common Council at $2,500 per annum was passed; also the bill fixing the terms of office of heads of Departments in New-York. Among the bills reported favorably was one authorizing a horse railroad from Newtown Creek to Astoria, and the Senate bill fixing the number of Notaries Public in the State. A joint resolution to adjourn sine die on the 14th of April was introduced and laid over.

FROM EUROPE.

We have advices from Europe two days later, by the arrival at this port yesterday of the steamship Asia. The dates are to the 16th inst. The news is important. The diplomatic correspondence, called for by Parliament, in reference to the war in America, has been issued. Mr. MASON's latest letters urge the English Government to declare the blockade of the Southern ports a nullity, or not to respect it, because it can be shown that the North has not been able to render it complete and total. The refusal of this application is cause of dissatisfaction to the South. The latest cause of dissatisfaction on the part of the North is that England has done too little to satisfy the National Government in the case of the Alabama. The London Times, in an editorial on this correspondence, says the irritation that may be traced in nearly an equal degree in both divisions—North and South—is of itself a proof that England has not unduly inclined to either side. The latest dates of correspondence leave both with no grounds for more than remonstrances, and both have much less to say against anything England has done than in favor of something they assert she ought to do. The Times reiterates its arguments in defence of the position of England in the matter of the Alabama. The Union and Emancipation Society of Manchester having sent a protest to Earl RUSSELL against fitting out vessels for the Confederates in England, Earl RUSSELL replies by pointing out that the act of Parliament requires evidence on oath to enable proceedings to be taken against parties suspected of contravening the law. It is asserted that irritation among the operatives in Lancashire was increasing very strongly. They complain of the cessation of the cotton trade, the enormous reduction in wages, the increasing pressure of taxation, and the increasing price of the necessaries of life. The accounts from Poland, although vague, show conclusively that the revolution is assuming the most formidable proportions. The revolutionists (so they are still to have credited) already some 50,000 men. The latest telegrams say Quenstown alone that the Russians have suffered another defeat near Myszrowem, losing 100 killed. The attitude of the French Government continued to be decidedly in favor of the Poles. An advance of ½d. per pound had taken place in Cotton in the Liverpool market. Breadstuffs and Provisions were quiet. Consols, 92¼ for money.

GENERAL NEWS.

GEORGE THOMAS GUNTER, Esq., addressed the Democratic Union Association last evening on "Loyalty." He stated that in time of war the people are bound to accept, without question, the policy of the Government; but argued that constitutional means only—the ballot-box and free discussion—should be brought to bear to remedy the evils complained of.

A squad of nineteen colored volunteers, for the Fifty-fourth Massachusetts Regiment, left Albany on Friday for the encampment at Readville, near Boston. Others are expected soon to follow.

The following is Gen. BURNSIDE's first order upon assuming his new command:

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE OHIO,
CINCINNATI, Ohio, March 25, 1862.

GENERAL ORDER No. 97.—In accordance with instructions from the General-in-Chief, the undersigned hereby assumes command of the Department of the Ohio.

(Signed) A. E. BURNSIDE,
Major-General Commanding.

Official: LEWIS RICHARDS, Asst. Adj.-Gen.

It is confidently stated that Gov. GAMBLE, of Missouri, after consultation with prominent members of the Legislature and other citizens of the State, has decided to call the State Convention together, and submit the question of emancipation to it. Gov. GAMBLE, Lieut. Gov. HALL, Hon. W. A. HALL, and other prominent men, heretofore opponents of emancipation, have lately given in their adhesion to the movement, and declared their willingness to vote for an ordinance to effect it.

A livelier inquiry prevailed for the principal kinds of Breadstuffs and Provisions on Saturday; prices of Flour, Wheat, Corn, Oats and Hog products were decidedly firmer. Whisky was more bought after, and was advancing. Groceries were less freely purchased. Cotton was in limited request, at about previous rates. Hay, Tallow and Clover Seed attracted rather more attention. Other articles were lightly dealt in. Very limited freight engagements were effected. There were 438 vessels of all classes in port.

Negro Equality and Slavery.

Professor MOSES has had the goodness to furnish the public, through the columns of the World, with his reasons for becoming a member of that "Society for the Diffusion of Political Information," whose clandestine birth excited so much scandal a few weeks ago. After paying his respects in a few nervous epithets to the reporter whose presence among the accouchieurs created so much disturbance, he proceeds to give his reason for supposing that the Republican party and the North in general stand in need of the instruction, upon questions of political economy and public morality—of persons like himself, and Messrs. BROOKS and FERNANDO WOOD. This reason is neither more nor less than the doctrines which he alleges to be held by the entire Republican party, on the subject of negro equality. He is satisfied that they, as well as the Abolitionists, believe the negro race to be, in every respect, the equal of the white race, and that it is therefore entitled to the same political and social rights and privileges, and he devotes nearly a column to defending Mr. STEPHENS' famous declaration that "negro inequality" is the "corner-stone" of the new Confederacy. He says:

"Let us learn what Mr. STEPHENS actually did say. His language is this: 'The foundations of our new Government are laid, its corner-stone rests upon'—what? Slavery? no—'upon the great truth that the negro is not equal to the white man, that Slavery'—which he then defines to be 'subordination to the superior race'—'is his natural and moral condition. This, our new Government, is the first in the history of the world based upon this great physical, philosophical and moral truth.' This language could not be applied to Slavery. It would be a strange misapplication of terms to call Slavery a physical, philosophical and moral truth. He had just been stating to his hearers that the ideas prevalent at the time our Federal Constitution was formed 'rested upon the assumption of the equality of the races.' This proposition he desires to be canvassed, and that the new Government was founded upon exactly the opposite idea. The error on one side, which he combats, is the assumed equality of the races. The opposite truth which he propounds is the physical, philosophical and moral truth that the two races are not equal, and the inference to be drawn from this truth is that this physical difference determines the status of the inferior race."

Now the language which Mr. STEPHENS did use, as reported in the Savannah Republican, in another part of this very same speech, enables us to dispense with Mr. MOSES's gloss, in our efforts to get at the orator's meaning. "Slavery," said he, is the natural and normal condition of the negro. This, our new Government, is the first in the history of the world based upon this great physical, philosophical and moral truth." So that the great Confederate "truth" is not simply, as Mr. MOSES would have us believe, that the black race is inferior to the white, but that Slavery is "the natural and normal condition" of the former. Mr. MOSES tries to get rid of the very unpleasant appearance which this great "truth" bears in the eyes of the whole Christian world, by giving us Mr. STEPHENS' definition of Slavery, which is "subordination to the superior race." We happily do not need either his aid or Mr. STEPHENS', to discover what Slavery is. We admit that it involves subordination to the superior race, but then there are various kinds of subordination. There is the subordination of the child to his father, and of the servant to his master, and of the soldier to his officer, and of a people to their rulers; and of all these, justice approves, because they do not involve on the part of the inferior the loss of any of the essential rights or attributes of humanity. The subordination of Slavery is something different from any of these. It means that the slave shall stand, not in the position of an inferior man, but of an inferior animal, of something that is not a man; that he shall be bought and sold, and used and bred like an ox or an ass. It is, in short, Mr. STEPHENS' theory of negro subordination which has outraged the public opinion of the world, but the fact that the kind of subordination which he declares to be the negro's "natural and normal condition," seeks to obliterate all distinction between him and the beasts of the field.

That any portion of the Republican party—the party which has made the emancipation of the people of the South the sole object of its existence, and which believes the "negro race" to be the equal of the white race, or that any such doctrine is to be found in the speeches or writings of any but a half dozen or the extreme Abolitionists—are really crazy. Moreover, we extend only thinking that these Diffusionists are just as well aware of this fact as we are. It is not about negro inequality we differ with the South or with the Democrats. There is nothing within our knowledge so well established, so that some races are inferior to others, morally, intellectually and physically. One might as well deny that some men were more eloquent, or more clever, or handsomer, or stronger than others, as to deny this. Where we part company with the Democracy and the Moses is in drawing the inference from this potent truth. They hold that where a body of weak, ill-favored, stupid men are dwelling alongside a stronger, better-looking, abler and more energetic man, it is the right of the latter to rob, beat and sell the former. This is the great "truth" on which the Confederacy is founded. It is, too, the great "truth" on which the social organization of all the Slave States rests. As long as it is confined in its operation to those States, we cannot unconstitutionally, perhaps, overthrow its application. But we object, and shall always object, to its extension to territories in which it does not now exist, and which are under our protection, and for whose future we are legally and morally responsible; and we object to the use of our Courts, or armies, or ambassadors for its dissemination or support.

We do so, because we not only believe it to be fatal to the material and moral welfare of every community which adopts it, but because we hold that the sound republican theory of human rights and human duties makes physical weakness and mental or moral deficiency titles to pity and protection, and not invitations to fraud and violence; that the more helpless and inferior a man is by nature, the more carefully should the laws of a democratic commonwealth enforce his claim to his wages, his wife, his children, and his own body. We do not advocate, because we do not believe in, negro equality. We would not, if we could, give negroes a share in the Government. But we heartily indorse Mr. BAYNE's doctrine that they are entitled to protection, not only none the less but all the more because they are inferior; and they are entitled to it in an special manner at our hands, because we have, more than any people in the world, preached the doctrine of the inherent dignity and value of humanity in its humblest, most helpless and most degraded condition.

England and Brazil.

A recent debate in the House of Commons on the interruption of friendly relations between Great Britain and Brazil has added fresh interest to that question, and served to place in a still stronger light the imperious and arbitrary conduct of the British Government and its representative in Brazil.

The maxim of ancient Rome in relation to the treatment of foreign nations, was parcere subjectis, et debellare superbos—"to spare the humble, and to crush the proud;" but England in the Brazilian imbroglio bears out her ignoble and almost uniform policy—the inverse of the Roman—of crushing the weak and cringing to the proud.

Even had the Court of Rio been guilty of the alleged misdemeanors against British subjects, it would nevertheless have been entitled to just and moderate treatment at the hands of the British Government; for Brazil has been long one of the steadiest friends, and, what is more important, most profitable customers of the British people. But in a case where the Brazilian authorities can hardly be said to have given any real cause of offence, they have just reason to be exasperated at the insults and outrages to which their country has been subjected at the hands of the English.

Mr. CAMPBELL, the representative of England to the Court of Brazil, appears to have made the notorious VIMEIRA his model, so far as insolence and violence are concerned, and Consul VERGARA, his coadjutor in this disreputable transaction, has proved himself to be a dunky as well as an imbecile. Had the British Government designed to send two men to that country, who would render the names of England and Englishmen hateful to the people, it could not have made a better selection. From the day of their arrival in Brazil to the present time, they seem to have taken a special pleasure in getting into squabbles with the Brazilian authorities and people; and with characteristic avidity they seized upon the occurrences which gave rise to the pending difficulty, and converted them into weapons of offence. These occurrences were, the loss of the British bark Prince of Wales on a remote and thinly populated part of the Brazilian territory, in 1861, and the arrest and imprisonment, for offences against Brazilian laws, of certain British naval officers in Rio, about the same period. The crew of the bark had been drowned, and some of them had been washed ashore; her cargo, likewise, had been driven to land, and rescued and appropriated, as far as suitable, by the inhabitants. Upon these facts, Messrs. CAMPBELL and VERGARA founded count number one of the indictment against the Brazilian Government. VERGARA had hastened to the scene of the wreck as soon as he heard of it. Because he could find only four of the corpses, he at once concluded that the entire crew had been murdered, though the absence of all marks of violence on the persons of those recovered, should have led him to infer the contrary; and because it was evident that the inhabitants had appropriated a portion of the cargo of the wrecked ship, therefore it was determined between him and his principal that the Government of Dom PEDRO should be made to pay for the whole!

Count No. II. was based on the fact that British officers had been assaulted, arrested, imprisoned, insulted by some Brazilian officers; and for this also reparation was demanded. The imperial foreign minister, however, returned, in the first instance, a peremptory refusal to comply with the demands of Great Britain. The Government of Brazil said and seemed to have his people put on trial, as foreign aliens, for crimes of which there did not exist a particle of proof; he would not consent to indemnify the owners of the shipwrecked cargo, for that would establish a precedent which would render him liable to indemnify the owners of every cargo that should in future be lost on his coast. Nor could he consent to make any reparation than what had been already made, for the arrest and imprisonment of the British naval officers, since said officers were not in uniform when arrested, but dressed as private individuals, and because their arrest and subsequent imprisonment had been owing to their own misconduct.

Now, here was a case which especially required to be handled with caution and diplomatic tact, and in which there was no ground for resorting to harsh or extreme measures. There was no proof nor likelihood that murder had been committed; the claim of indemnity for the lost cargo was a pure attempt at imposition; and the individuals imprisoned were liberated the moment it was ascertained that they were British officers.

Yet what was the course pursued by Mr. CAMPBELL on receiving the reply of the Brazilian Minister? Instead of truthfully reporting the facts of the case to the British Government, and awaiting instructions from Downing-street, he at once set about making reprisals on Brazil, by ordering the commander of the British squadron off the coast to seize on several Brazilian merchant vessels, and institute a virtual blockade of the port of Rio. After perpetrating this outrage on a feeble and friendly Power, he then coolly sat down and prepared for the information of his principals at home, and as a justification of his own insolence, an ex parte and mendacious account of the whole matter, which he at once forwarded to England. To this Earl RUSSELL and Mr. LAYARD gave implicit credence, and so in both Houses of Parliament the iniquitous action of their subordinate in Brazil has been defended by them.

Meantime, the Government of Dom PEDRO, to effect the release of the vessels seized, and to save its subjects from being harrassed and domineered over, has offered to pay, under protest, the amount of indemnity claimed by Mr. CAMPBELL, and to submit the questions in dispute between Great Britain and Brazil, to the arbitration of King LEOPOLD of Belgium. To this most reasonable proposition the British Government could hardly have the face to make any objection, since the Belgian monarch is not only uncle to VICTORIA, but a pensioner of England; and as that potentate has consented to arbitrate between the litigants, it is to be hoped that this most discreditable affair will be equitably settled.

REBELS HERE AND THERE.—It matters not where a man lives—if his proclivities and desires are in a given direction, through these he will look at and interpret events and things. The apophthegm that "the wish is father to the thought," contains the philosophy of much that we see and hear in men and newspapers. Rebels in Richmond, New-York and London alike, and continually predict failure to our arms; and of each succeeding development of events, or each action in the field, they give the same version and interpretation, though each of them may profess to be guided by totally different motives from the other.

This was sharply called to mind, yesterday, by observing, almost simultaneously, an editorial article in the New-York World and another in the Richmond Sentinel—the latter the journal recently removed from Fredericksburgh to the rebel Capital. Both articles are on our military movements, and the spirit and language of both are so nearly similar that one might easily think the Richmond article was borrowed from the New-York journal, or vice versa. Both are lugubrious, both foretoken general disaster, and both predict illluck for our arms in the only region in which operations are at present being actively carried on—upon the Mississippi and Yazoo Rivers.

Observe the striking analogy between the language of the Richmond and New-York organs on the latter point:

From the New-York World, March 22.

On the Mississippi, therefore, it is clear we as yet have no success of any account to boast of. The attack on Fort Hudson was a failure; the passage of the batteries a partial failure; the Lake Providence Canal is a failure; the Yazoo Pass expedition is a failure, and a very bad one at that. We are yet to hear of what comes of the completed cut-off and the Sunflower River expedition. In the meantime our readers would do well to put very little faith in the military prophecies that come over the wires from Washington.

From the Richmond Sentinel, March 24.

Thus far the enemy is utterly foiled in every one of his late moves. Farragut was whipped at Fort Hudson; Rodgers broke down before he got there, and fell back without a fight; the Yazoo Pass expedition ends in shamefacedness and flight; at Vicksburgh they are thwarted out. Lincoln has therefore lost in lives an hope deferred, a blot that does not suit the temper of his people just now.

We need not, of course, show the mistakes—we only desire to show the cousinship—of these confederated organs. The attack on Port Hudson by FARRAGUT was not a failure, nor was he badly whipped; the Lake Providence Canal has not drowned our men out; the Yazoo Pass expedition is not a "failure, and a very bad one at that," nor has it ended in our shamefacedness and flight.

But can an Ethiopian change his skin or a rebel his spots?

ROSECRANS' POSITION.—If the rebel Generals see clearly that it is impossible for them to hold Vicksburgh, or, the Mississippi being virtually in our control, that it is not worth holding, there is nothing likelier than that they should move the larger part of their force northward to join BRAGG, and then, with this great combined army, make a frantic effort to push through Tennessee, and into Kentucky. On the face of it, at least, this would be turning the tide of war, and it would take months of hard work before we could drive them back again. They are "feeling" that section of country very extensively, and their partisans from his base, that then they may have the way open fully opened to them.

ROSECRANS, however, probably sees through their game, whatever it be, and he is acting with as much caution as formerly he acted with offensive vigor. He remains at Murfreesboro, well posted and watchful, acting only on the defensive. He will probably so remain for a time. He can lose nothing by it. He is not strong enough to pursue the rebels now in his front beyond Chattanooga, but he is strong enough to hold his ground against twice their force. With BUELL's corps in Kentucky, as a supporting or co-operating body, it will be easy to checkmate the intended rebel move—if such a move as we have speculated we be intended. In the meantime, the army of ROSECRANS holds the defensive.

THE CONFEDERATE FOREIGN LOAN.—The negotiation of the Confederate fifteen million loan in Europe, seems to be a most difficult matter—which is not to be wondered at, considering the value of Confederate stock in the Confederacy itself. Their agents have toddled around from one city to another, from Bourse to Bourse, from Paris to Amsterdam, from London to Frankfort, with pretty paper promises of the great repudiater in their hands, and with pockets full of inviting cotton bonds based on burning bales. They have, probably, sold enough of the latter in England to pay the salary of MASON and other emissaries, and to bribe the Anglo-secesh Press; and they may have met with as signal success in France; but beyond that, the Confederate hawkers can get nothing from their bonds but grief.

Their latest and most desperate attempt was at Frankfort, in Germany, with the house of ERLANGER; but the German correspondence of the London papers indicate that this has proved either a failure or a feint. The Daily News says that it was certain English operators, who were attempting to negotiate for the Confederacy at Frankfort; but not a farthing could be raised for them on any German Bourse; and the Star says the feeling of indignation against the persons engaged in the affair was so strong that to quiet popular feeling, it was publicly announced that none of the loan would be offered in Germany, but only in England and France, while the leading bankers denied the existence of any such negotiation.

It is announced in our European intelligence this morning by the Asia, that the Confederate operators have again changed their field, in accordance with the above programme, and that the "loan of £3,000,000 was expected to be introduced in London and Paris in the week following the Asia's departure." How high anybody anywhere has bid for the loan, we have yet to learn. But we do not suppose they would give any more than the Confederate paper brings in Richmond—that is, about twenty cents, more or less, on the dollar. We have heard in other years of a Mexican loan being negotiated for three cents on the dollar; but if any Englishman or Frenchman pays as much for Confederate stock, he will pay precisely three cents more than its worth on every dollar of it he buys.

LOYALTY AT HOME AND ABROAD.—Among the foreign news which we published yesterday was an extract of a letter from Frankfort, (Germany,) which mentioned that public opinion in Germany against Slavery was too strong to allow any one to interfere, by speech, writing or action in its favor; and that the course of the Confederates was so universally detested there, that persons who ventured to advocate that cause in the Clubs, had been remonstrated with, and then expelled. It would seem by this that there is actually a deeper devotion to our country and its war for freedom in Frankfort than in New-York. We hear a great outcry from Secessionists here about intolerance and suppression of freedom of speech, as if they could be permitted, without rebuke, to preach and propagate the devilish doctrines of JEFF. DAVIS in the Press, on the rostrum, in the streets and in society. But here the people have made no such determined stand in their public, political, and social relations as our friends in Germany have made for us. We should like to know, for instance, if there are not members of prominent Clubs in New-York who have "ventured to advocate the cause of the Confederates," and to show their sympathy with the rebellion, and who yet have neither been remonstrated with nor expelled? In such a supreme crisis of our country and of liberty as this, there is a patriotic intolerance which it were well to have more widely and universally applied.

NEWS FROM FORTRESS MONROE.

An Order Closing the Theatres of Norfolk—An Arrival from Charleston, &c.

FORTRESS MONROE, Friday, March 27.

Orders were issued by Gen. VIELE, yesterday, closing the theatres in Norfolk for the present, and allowing no one on the street after 9 o'clock at night. It is supposed this restriction was caused by the attempt made the night before to fire the Quartermaster's storehouses in the city of Norfolk. The incendiaries (three in number) made their escape, leaving their infernal machine behind.

Maj.-Gen. PEAR visited Fortress Monroe yesterday on the army gunboat West End, Commander P. A. Rivers.

Two Jews were arrested yesterday on the Thomas A. Morgan while making her trip from this place to Yorktown, they having in their possession a lot of contraband goods.

Paymasters have arrived this morning to pay off the troops in this Department, at Norfolk, Suffolk and Yorktown.

FORTRESS MONROE, Saturday, March 28.

The steamer S. R. Spaulding, from Hilton Head on Thursday, arrived here to-day.

She reports that the steamboat Expressmen was aground near Stono Inlet, and that no important move had been made by the fleet.

Condition of the Hudson River.

ALBANY, Saturday, March 29.

The water in the river here is still receding.

The Central, Hudson River, Troy and Greenbush Railroads are in perfect order, the trains arriving and departing on time.

The ferry boats are running regularly, the river being clear of ice in front of the city.

Death of Brig.-Gen. Cooper.

CLEVELAND, Saturday, March 29.

Brig.-Gen. COOPER died at Columbus, Ohio, this morning.

The Memphis Bulletin of the 22d, Rumors in Corinth, Arrival of Refugees, Condition of the Rebel Army, &c.

A great distance to the restoration of a state of loyalty in the unrepentant districts of the South has been the unguarded language of our soldiers—both officers and men. The Government cannot be too calm or too thoroughly impressed with the importance of this truth. The magnitude of the abuses which have been committed can scarcely be exaggerated. All accounts agree in charging gross irregularity, not to say rapacity, upon our troops; and men of the highest intelligence, of undoubted loyalty and veracity, hesitate not to attribute the numerous and implacable disloyalty of the conquered districts to this cause. They even go further and say that the minds of Union men have been converted into rebels by the outrages which have been perpetrated upon them by the Union troops, who should be their protectors.

There is nothing to be gained, and everything to be lost by concealing or glossing over these facts. They have done, and are doing, more than anything else to protract and embitter the contest by leaving the people of the rebel States, whether loyal or otherwise, nothing to expect but robbery and ruin from the advance of our armies.

All accounts agree as to the extent and enormity of these outrages, as well as to their injurious effect in destroying all love for the Union. I was told to-day by an officer who served in a high rank in the Valley of Virginia last Summer, that the outrages perpetrated by BANKS's brigade in that section had increased the disloyal sentiment ten-fold. When the army advanced into that valley the people were nearly divided in sentiment, and among those who had been induced into the ranks of the Secessionists by cunning demagogues, he found very little hostility to the Government, or to the idea of a restoration of the Union among the masses. But the cruel robberies, and the wanton destruction of property by the troops—officers as well as men—completely alienated the whole population. My informant related several instances of barbarity which would disgrace Cossacks or Tartars.

No one who has crossed the Long Bridge and ridden over Alexandria and Fairfax Counties, in Virginia, will be staggered by the most extravagant account of vandalism in the valley or elsewhere. There is scarcely a fence left within five miles of the bridge. The Northern settlers, who were all Free-Soilers and Abolitionists, fared no better than the slaveholding Secessionists. One of these men, who resided in an octagonal house on top of the hill, in full view of the Capitol, and whom I have known for several years as an ardent Free-Soiler, was literally driven to madness by the destruction of his little property, the fruit of his industry; and at the very beginning of the war, he abandoned his place and went back to his Northern home. During the Summer of 1861, while the thousands of troops were encamped between this city and Alexandria, it was the fashion of the soldiers to build for themselves and their officers picturesque houses of bushes and tree-tops; and one officer told me that his servant, an Italian, had robbed a handsome vacant dwelling in the vicinity of its doors, with white knobs, and its window sash, in order to ornament his fantastic Summer-house.

The same stories of devastation come up from Tennessee and North Carolina, and the same complaints of the ruinous consequences in destroying all love for the Union. Gov. JOHNSON thinks that these outrages of Union troops upon the people, without regard to the question of loyalty, constitute the great impediment in the way of secession. Other accounts from Tennessee fully bear out the Governor's statements. So indiscriminate has been the rapacity that a distinguished Tennesseean of undoubted loyalty, who has been intrusted with a valuable appointment, and who is, I believe, at the present time making Union speeches in New-York or Connecticut, had his house and farm sacked by our troops.

From North Carolina I hear similar accounts from honorable men, officers and others. For instance, a gentleman informs me that, while on a steamboat in the sounds of North Carolina, he met with a lady, the wife of an officer, who had just arrived, and who informed him that, before leaving New-York City, she had seen a splendid piano which had been stolen from Newbern, and appropriated by a general officer.

Now, it is very probable that this piano belonged to a Secessionist, and that it was a fit subject of confiscation; but the officer who appropriated it to his own use, was as much a thief as if he had robbed a piano store in Broadway. If the owner had forfeited it by treason, it at once became the property of the Government, and the thief should be made to disgorge.

The same gentleman informs me, that during the expedition to the vicinity of Goldsborough, last Fall, some soldiers went to the house of a poor widow and robbed her of one of her two beds. Finding it inconvenient to carry away the other, they deliberately ripped it up and scattered the feathers to the winds! This story was related to my friend by another soldier, who witnessed the dastardly act, and entertained for its authors a proper sense of abhorrence.

I am fully convinced of the necessity of dealing rigorously with traitors and rebels, and I heartily approve the recent discriminating order of Gen. HALLECK. But I think it deficient in this, that a clause is not added affixing the most rigorous punishment upon every act of rapacity committed by officers or soldiers. It will never do to leave the question of loyalty to be decided by roving gangs of soldiers, who are under none of the restraints of law, military nor civil. When the object of pursuit is plunder, it is a matter of very little concern to the rover, whether the possessor of the coveted goods acknowledges allegiance to the United States or to JEFF. DAVIS. Every citizen of the rebel districts who is not in arms against the Government, and every household, without regard to the sentiments of its members, should be protected against the unauthorized violence of soldiers of every grade, and death should be the penalty for any flagrant violation of this regulation.

Had this just and humane policy been adhered to, not merely in theory but in practice, from the beginning of the war, our troops would have been in a far higher state of discipline and efficiency, and the rebels would have been much more nearly subdued, for the reason that the people subject to their sway would have had nothing to fear, and everything to hope from a return to allegiance.

The question naturally arises, is it possible to enforce such discipline in the army as is here contemplated? I answer, all history attests the truth, that it is far easier to govern an army well and vigorously, than with laxity of discipline. In a well-governed army, as in a well-governed State, all goes on smoothly and without trouble or annoyance, while in one commanded by a feeble hand all is confusion, robbery tion and intelligence. The superior intelligence of the rank and file of the Abolition armies is an obstacle to the maintenance of order and strict discipline; on the contrary, that very superiority furnishes of itself, a facility for organization and order. Every private man reads and understands the objects of the war, the nature of the obligation which he has assumed, and the necessity of obedience. He is also capable of understanding that his own comfort and happiness are best promoted by the discharge of his duties as prescribed in the regulations, and that every departure from them will bring upon him some form of punishment, suffering or inconvenience.

The question then resolves itself into this: Have we at the head of the army men capable of comprehending the necessity of discipline, and with the manly courage and firmness to will it?

Gen. Scott, while in Mexico, had fifty of his own soldiers shot for outrages upon Mexicans; and the result was, that the people of that unfortunate country regarded him as a deliverer, rather than a conqueror; and overtures were actually made to him to become the permanent ruler of the country.

History is full of similar examples, showing that clemency and humanity in a conqueror never fail to win the esteem and gratitude of the conquered. When CHARLES XII., of Sweden, captured Copenhagen, he ordered the municipal authorities to send to his camp supplies of provisions for his troops. They complained, as a matter of course, from the necessity of the case, but great was their astonishment when a liberal price was paid down for every article delivered! The effect of this humane policy was completely to win the hearts of the Danes, and the city market was abandoned for the better one to be found in the camp of the conqueror.

The same hero, after having driven AUGUSTUS of Saxony from his Polish throne, and put STANISLAS, a native Prince in his place, marched his army into Saxony, where he still permitted AUGUSTUS to reign as Elector. One day, when riding out on horseback near Leipsic, a peasant of the country presented himself before him in an imploring attitude, and demanded justice upon a Swedish grenadier, who had robbed him of a turkey, which had been prepared for his family dinner. The King had the soldier called: "Is it true," said he, with a serene countenance, "that you have robbed this man?" "Sire," said the soldier, "I have not done him so much harm as your Majesty has done to his master. You have taken from him a kingdom, and I have only taken from this countryman a turkey." The King gave ten ducats to the peasant, and pardoned the soldier for the boldness of his wit, remarking "You must remember, my friend, that if I have taken a kingdom from AUGUSTUS, I have not taken it for myself." The historian adds that the great Fair of Leipsic was held as usual; the merchants came with a feeling of perfect safety; they saw not a Swedish soldier, and it was said that the army of the King of Sweden was in Saxony only for the protection of the people; he commanded in all the electorate with a power as absolute, and a tranquillity as profound as in Stockholm. He ordered, in all the cities which he garrisoned, that each housekeeper with whom the soldiers were quartered, should give certificates every month of their good conduct, without which the soldier could not receive his pay. As a further security, inspectors went every fifteen days from house to house, to inform themselves if the Swedes had not been guilty of robbery—in which case care was taken to compensate the housekeeper and punish the guilty soldier.

To doubt that an American army in the latter part of the Nineteenth Century is less capable of discipline and subordination than a Swedish army in the beginning of the Eighteenth, or that American rulers and commanders of the present day are less humane and less wise than the Scandinavian despot whose country had scarcely emerged from barbarism, is to concede our boasted civilization to be a failure. Allowing Soldiers to Vote.

Senator Low, of the majority of the Committee to which was referred the bill allowing soldiers from this State in the service of the United States to vote, reported a bill of which the following are the first two and principal sections:

"SECTION 1. Every qualified and duly registered voter of the State of New-York in the military or naval service of the State or the United States who shall on the day of any election in which the voters of New-York, the city thereof, or any ward or election district therein, are entitled to vote, be in military service and not having deserted, and having not been convicted of any infamous crime, shall be entitled to vote at such election wherever he may be held, in the regiment, company or place where he shall have a residence at the time of such election, and the vote so cast shall have the right to count with the ballots and votes of the other electors.

"SEC. 2. He shall, by an oath or affirmation, subscribed in writing, or by an oath or affirmation taken before some officer in the service, specifying his place of residence, and that he is a citizen of the State of New-York, and that he is a qualified voter in the election district in which he shall claim to vote, and that he has not voted at such election, and that he will not vote at any other place than in the election district in which he shall claim to be a qualified voter, and that he will not disclose the name of any candidate for whom he shall have voted, or the manner in which he shall have voted, or the number of his company, regiment, or place of residence, or any other thing which may lead to the discovery of

LOCAL INTELLIGENCE.

Religious Intelligence.

This is Palm Sunday—next before Easter—so called because the day of which it is the anniversary of Christ's entrance into Jerusalem, where with great honor he was greeted, the multitude welcoming Him with hosannas, strewed branches of palm in His way—the palm, the emblem of victory. On this eventful day, according to the Scripture record, our Lord, after entering the temple, healed many of the sick, blind and lame. St. Philip announced to our Lord that certain Greek proselytes, who could not enter the interior of the temple, were anxious to see Him, and He, therefore, went to them in the Court of the Gentiles. There He predicted the conversion of the Gentiles, and the glorious harvest of His own death and resurrection; and as He uttered a prayer to His Father, He was answered by a miraculous voice, which the people mistook for thunder. Our Lord further fulfilled prophecy in cleansing the Temple of the money-changers by scourging them from the Temple. At evening, He returned to Bethany with the Twelve, and was the guest of Lazarus, and Mary and Martha. In commemoration of this day by the Catholics, certain palms, or some other evergreen, previously blessed by the priest, are carried to churches—a most ancient and expressive memorial of Him who dictated and led to accept the same tribute from His Apostles.

Every day of the coming week, except the first, is a fast day. It is called Passion Week, because in it the Saviour of the world suffered. It is called Holy Week, because in it occurred the consummating incidents of that Great Sacrifice, which was the end of all prophecy. On Monday took place the morning walk from Bethany, the cursing of the barren fig-tree, the second visit to the Temple, and the return at night-fall to the Mount of Olives, the discovery of the withering of the accursed fig-tree, the interesting hour of our Saviour of several parables, the prophecy of the speedy ruin of the Temple, and of His fast approaching hour. On Wednesday, the sale of "Him that was valued at thirty pieces of silver." On Thursday, (Maundy-Thursday, the day of the ordinance, or ceremony, when Christ said, "Do this in remembrance of Me.") He instituted the ordinance of the Lord's Supper, and set the example of humility by washing the feet of His disciples. On Friday, (Good Friday,) is commemorated the crucifixion of our Saviour. According to St. Mark, it commenced at the third and ended at the sixth hour. On Saturday, (Easter-even,) we commemorate His mysterious Descent into Hell, or place of departed spirits, while His body remained in the tomb of that pious man, Joseph, of Arimathea.

The following are the

for the week:

This forenoon, Right Rev. Bishop Farrar, of this Diocese, administers the rite of Confirmation in St. Ann's Church, Brooklyn; and in the evening, in the Holy Trinity, in that city. On Monday evening, at St. John's, Williamsburgh; on Tuesday, at St. Luke's, in this City; on Wednesday, A. M., at the Ordination, and in the evening, at the Mediator, in this City; on Thursday, A. M., at St. Paul's Chapel, and in the evening, at the Holy Innocents; on Good Friday morning, in St. George's, New-York; and in the evening, at Grace, Brooklyn; and, lastly, in the afternoon of Easter-Even, at Trinity Church.

A very general religious interest prevails throughout Brooklyn. Many of the Baptist, Methodist and Congregational Churches are holding continuous meetings. In the State-street Congregational, (Rev. Mr. Hammond's,) there has been an increasing interest for many weeks past. A large number of young men have become the subjects of converting grace, and on the first Sunday in April, it is expected that quite a number will be added to the Church. The meetings will be continued during the evening week, the pastor preaching nearly every evening.

In the Willow-Street M. E. Seamen's Church (Rev. M. N. Gunsaul,) a large revival has been progressing for some weeks, resulting in nearly a score of clear conversions. This society expect to break ground for a new church edifice in a few weeks. The Hanson-Place, Bedford-Avenue, Carlton-Avenue, De Kalb-Avenue, and Clove-Road Methodist Churches, have all, more or less, experienced a good religious heating.

Rev. W. R. Williams, D. D., will preach to-night in the South Baptist church, Twenty-fifth-street, between Seventh and Eighth-avenues, on the Inspiration of the Scriptures, being the twelfth of the series of Doctrinal Sermons being delivered by distinguished clergymen of various denominations, in that church.

This afternoon at 3 o'clock, the funeral services of Mrs. Lucy Maria Bowen, daughter of the venerable Lewis Tappan, will be held in Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, on which occasion Rev. Henry Ward Beecher will officiate.

The Late Explosion on the Steamtug D. E. Crary.

TESTIMONY GIVEN BEFORE THE CORONER.

The investigation as to the cause of the explosion on the steamtug D. E. Crary, on Tuesday morning last, was continued on Friday at the Twenty-eighth Precinct Station-house, by Coroner Wilsey. Mr. Francis G. Crary, who was part-owner of the tug, was the first witness examined. He testified that the boat was built in 1862, and made her first trip on the 12th of January last. At the time of the explosion Freeborn Anthony was Captain; Benjamin Sagen, Engineer; Geo. Eckles and John Brown, firemen; John Johnson, wheelman; Jas. Burgan, deck-hand; and John Zimmerman, cook and steward. When the accident occurred, witness was at home sick. On Monday last, Mr. Frank Crary asked witness what kind of a man the engineer was, and if he did not carry too much steam; to which witness replied that eighty pounds of steam could be carried with safety, and the engineer knew that well enough. He would blow off; witness had stated to Mr. Crary that the engineer was a good man, but that he would escape him as soon as he could get another good one to take his place. There was a crack in the boiler, and a patch was put on to stop the leak. The cause of the crack was owing to the manner in which the braces were put up, from the top of the arch to the shell, which was faulty in the construction. It was an ordinary soft patch, put on the hot, and not riveted on, but the leak would not stop until the braces were altered; this alteration had been done at Pier No. 45, North River, after the explosion. Just 24 hours before a state pressure is impossible to tell whether it was burned or broken. Witness was unable to tell the immediate cause of the explosion. The steamboat Inspectors had granted a certificate which warranted the bearing of eighty pounds of steam. No more than eighty pounds had been carried when witness was on board. The workmanship of the boiler did not entirely witness; new boilers generally leak more or less. The engineer was very positively ordered to carry more than eighty pounds of steam.

Alexander Cardinell, of Newtown, Queens County, testified that he made the boiler for Mr. Crary in November last; that the contract was for a boiler which would carry a steam pressure of 80 pounds; that it was built strong enough to carry a pressure of 120 pounds; the boiler was tested and the engine builder expressed himself satisfied with it. The engine was built by Frank R. Foster, of No. 379 First-street, Williamsburgh. The material used in the construction of the boiler was of the best kind. This witness attributed the explosion to a shallow state of the water in the boiler.

Lewis Beers, a boiler-maker, testified that he was in the employ of the Union Iron Works; that about two weeks ago he was sent for to make some repairs upon the boiler in question; that at that time there was a crack in it twenty-two inches in length; he repaired it as well as he could under the circumstances, but not as well as he would have done if he had had the time, and if it had not been a tug.

At this stage of the investigation the Coroner adjourned the inquest until 9 o'clock on Monday next, at the Twenty-eighth Precinct Station-house.

The Hicks-street Abortion Case.

A NEW INDICTMENT AGAINST DR. BROWN.

The Grand Jury on Friday presented to the Court of General Sessions a new indictment against Dr. E. M. Brown for murder in the second degree, growing out of the Hicks-avenue abortion case. This action has been taken on the advice of the District-Attorney for two reasons. First, new evidence is said to have been discovered tending to raise the grade of the offence alleged to have been committed by Dr. Brown; and secondly, it was desirable to avoid the issue proposed to be made by the counsel for Dr. Brown, namely, that he could not be placed in jeopardy for the murder of the unborn child, if he should be found guilty of the lesser offence of abortion. The District-Attorney claims that by the finding of a new indictment for a different offence this question is disposed of. Messrs. Garvin and Graham, counsel for the defendant, in accordance with the order of the court, have entered upon the trial of the case, and they now have before them the jury empaneled for the trial. The case will be brought to a final issue in a few days. The case will be brought up in the Court of General Sessions, before Recorder Hackett, at the opening of the April term.

The Rear Rumbling Affair in the 19th Ward.

ANTE-MORTEM EXAMINATION BY THE CORONER.

At a late hour Thursday afternoon, Coroner Ranney held an ante-mortem examination, at the New-York Hospital, in the case of Patrick Hanes, the Frenchman who was shot on Tuesday night last. The following is the deposition in full:

Edward Smith, of No. 15 Rivington-street, being duly sworn, deposed and said: I believe myself in a dangerous condition, and that I shall not recover; on the night of last Tuesday, between eleven and eleven and a half, I was in the back room of the hall of the house where Hines was shot; I was in company with Hanes. Otterson, I said, said to me, "Smith, I want you to go out with me;" I said, what for? Otterson said, "I want you to go out with me;" I said, "What for?" Otterson said, "I want you to go out with me;" I said, "What for?" Otterson said, "I want you to go out with me;" I said, "What for?"

PERSONAL APPEARANCE OF THE PRINCESS.

The Morning Post thinks the face may be described as a long oval, and in its general appearance differs very much from the Teutonic type of face of the Germans. The facial line is straighter, and if such an expression could be permitted—more perpendicular than in the faces of the members of our own royal family, while the breadth across the face at the level of the eye is less. The forehead is full, finely formed, and what may be called well balanced, there being a very fair proportion of the perceptive and reflective faculties. She possesses what phrenologists would describe as individuality in considerable excess, while veneratiality is less fully developed. Firmness, and decision of character with feminine gentleness are very happily blended in her general expression. The hair, being worn back from the forehead, does not admit of much of it being seen beneath a bonnet, but it appears to be a lighten golden brown, not auburn, but brown, just slightly tinged with gold, which would show very distinctly when the light falls upon it. The eyes are full of tenderness; their color is gray, but they have such large pupils that they almost give the appearance of blackness to the whole surface. The mouth is prettily shaped, rather small, the lips delicately molded, and the chin rounded with exquisite delicacy. Her voice is divery and musical, and, when speaking English, there are faint and pretty traces of a foreign accent. "The first striking difference," says the Morning Herald, "between the photographs of the Princess and the living face, is the brilliant and beautiful intelligence of the eye, (which has never been caught, possible enough, and if it has a clear delicacy of complexion—the more luxurious because set of by golden brown hair—a charm so much and so terribly in female beauty. The features of the Princess, without being of any distinctive style, are certainly cast in the Grecian mold—with this difference, that the brow is better, and peculiarly marked with intellectual power. The mouth is fine, but has a very charming expression. The eyebrows are beautifully arched, and the whole cast of countenance of a character peculiarly calculated to win the sympathetic and admiration of a certainly expectant people."

THE CELEBRATION IN PARIS.

At Paris, on the night of the 10th—in honor of the marriage of the Prince of Wales—the portals of the Rome Office were illuminated by Count Persigny's direction, and the letters "A. A." Agreed entwined among the gas jets. Large olive branches radiated over the coat of arms of the neighboring British Embassy; while the triple ostrich feather, in colored lamps, fluttered over many noticeable establishments frequented by English residents. Banquets and receptions marked the occasion among her Majesty's loyal subjects. The children of the British Free Schools, 120 in number, were entertained by the Committee of the Schools at tea, and received Bibles in commemoration of the day. At 8 o'clock in the evening, about 400 of the English working classes were fêted at the Gymnase Gheselin, in the Rue de Rosvi. The festival was got up by the clergy and some of the working English residents. The room was well lit up, and adorned with banners, devices, and portraits of the Prince and Princess, and presented a most genial aspect. The English Choral Society sang some pieces; one or two addresses were delivered by the clergy, and refreshments were distributed in the intervals of the entertainment. The proceedings wound up with the "National Anthem," at about 10½ o'clock.

MISCELLANEOUS ITEMS.

Mr. W. H. Russell, LL. D., has consented to produce a complete history of the royal wedding, and the events and triumphal progresses antecedent thereto. The text will be accompanied by illustrative plates in full colors and gold, in double tinted lithography, and in wood engraving. The work is to be published by Messrs. Day & Son, and the price to subscribers is three guineas.

During the crush to see the illuminations at Manchester on the night, a man named Richard Kay was crushed to death. Another man, who had two loaded pistols in his pocket, one of them a revolver, wounded through the lungs by one of the barrels of the revolver exploding. He died soon afterwards. More than a dozen injured persons were taken to the infirmary during the night.

Hon. Mrs. F. Grosch, the newly-appointed Bedchamber Woman to the Princess of Wales, is the youngest daughter of the late Sir Robert Peel, and the subject of that exquisite picture by Landseer, called "The Bath," familiar to the public through the engraving. She married Mr. Grosch, the son of Lord Camoys, Lord in Waiting to the Queen, who is a Roman Catholic; and this, it is said, gave such deep offence to her brother, Sir William Peel, Chief of the Naval Brigade in the Crimea and India, that he altered a will entirely in her favor just previous to his decease.

The pathetic story that the Queen was affected to tears during the ceremony is positively denied.

Lord Derby, who was prevented by an attack of gout from attending the marriage of the Prince of Wales, is now rather better.

The Cologne Gazette mentions the fact that the engine of the train which conveyed the Princess Alexandra of Denmark to the Belgian frontier, was called the "Blesbert," while the engine-driver bore the name of Wellington.

The Prince of Wales jewelry is now becoming the "rage." Hundreds of thousands of medals have been struck off to commemorate the royal marriage.

THE MANCHESTER OPERATIVES.

A TURBULENT MEETING IN MANCHESTER—REV. C. M. DENISON DRIVEN FROM THE PLATFORM.

The Manchester Guardian gives the following particulars of the meeting of Lancashire unemployed operatives, in Stevenson-square, to return thanks to the American people for their contributions of food to the relief fund. We may observe that an impression prevailed that the real object of the promoters of the meeting was to get up a agitation in favor of the Federal Government, and signs were taken by the friends of the Confederate Government to defeat that object. The Guardian says: "After some delay, Rev. C. M. Denison commenced the proceedings with a prayer, not one word of which, owing to the hooting and confusion, could be heard beyond the spot where it was uttered. The prayer being concluded, several attempts were made to go on with the programme; but, beyond the success which attended a call for three cheers for the Queen and three more for the rebel President Brigham, those efforts were wholly ineffectual. At length, the expedient was set upon of inviting the opposite speakers to come and say what they had to say upon the platform. This done, the leader of the opposition began to address the mixed crowd amid the most tumultuous confusion. He was followed by a pale, frail person, and these carts full of what? to be drawn up in that square? What was it the promoters of that meeting intended the people to do? He said he did not wish to appear ungrateful to the American people for their gift of the bread, but he wanted to know why it was brought into that square, instead of being sent to the proper quarter—the quarter that the people have had to avail themselves of for the last nine months. At the conclusion of this speech, Thomas Evans endeavored to obtain a hearing, and the crowd agitated, threatening. Several other persons having failed in a similar manner, Mr. Emmens stood forward and was rather more successful. He denied that the object of the meeting was to offer a bait to the people, but the promoters had thought that, upon such a day of rejoicing, something better might be done than to give an empty pageant to the starving poor. They had accordingly spent £200 to carry out their intentions, and they were prepared to distribute to those who were in want 15,000 loaves of bread. Rev. C. W. Denison rose, and, after order had been restored, he proposed that the people should offer up their prayer to God in a hymn, in which all could join. (Confusion, laughter, and cries of 'No religion,' 'Plenty of hooting without that.') The irregular chaplain managed to obtain a hearing, and addressed the meeting upon emancipation. At the conclusion of his address the meeting became quite ungovernable. The crowd surged to and fro, and kept up an incessant uproar that drowned the voice of several successive speakers. The course of confusion rose to its height when a loaf of bread was hurled with great force across the lower of a member of the Alabama, in the direction of the platform. From this moment it was obvious that any attempt to restore order would be fruitless. The several dried-codfishes were carried by assault, and their contents were thrown in all directions, to calm weak persons on the platform protested against the disgraceful scene, while others pointed to what was going on as a worthy finale to such a meeting. In many cases severe injuries were caused by the force with which the loaves struck the people in the crowd. During this riotous scene, a loaf, thrown from the crowd, struck Rev. Mr. Denison. He thereupon quitted his place on the platform, and left the meeting. By this time the broad-carts had been taken possession of by some unnerved persons, who proceeded to distribute the loaves in a less disorderly manner. Another party of men were detected, the policemen in disguise carry of a bakery cart at hand were thrown open, and more loaves were thrown out upon the crowd below. In the midst of such confusion, a vote of thanks was carried to the people of the United States for the generosity which they had sent to the people of Lancashire."

THE RIOTING IN CORK.

Correspondence of the London Times.

Dublin, Friday, March 18.

At the Cork Police Court, on Wednesday morning, the Mayor made a statement about the rioting on the previous night. He declared that it was the result of an organized system, and he ascribed it to the cooking utensils that had been placed in the city on Sunday. It was all very well, he said, to write at the end of placards of that nature, "Ho who commits a robbery on this day is no Christian;" but they might as well say, "Don't call a man out to the pump." He described some of the outrages that had been perpetrated. Constable Ryan's face was a mass of bruises—there were twelve wounds on his head and face. The County Inspector got a severe scalp wound; Sub-Inspector Cameron also got a wound in the head, and several of the constabulary were wounded. It appears that the object of the

THE REVOLUTION IN POLAND.

The accounts of the insurrection continue vague. The insurgent forces are now computed at 50,000 men.

A dispatch of the 12th, from Rechowitz, says:

"A body of insurgents encountered the Russians at Sosnowitz to-day, and a sanguinary engagement ensued. The Russian officials in the town had already taken to flight when reinforcements arrived. The insurgents were dispersed, and a portion of their number driven on to Prussian territory."

A proclamation of the Revolutionary Committee was published at Warsaw denouncing those, who, in terms the infamous, men who would lay Poland vanquished and dishonored at the feet of the tyrant. The proclamation also states that the Committee, in emancipating the peasants, is not led by the fantastic theories which elsewhere threaten to upset European society.

The Archbishop of Warsaw—Monsignore Fielbert—had tendered his resignation as member of the Polish Council of State.

Gen. Langiewicz is said to have taken up his position to give battle to the Russians.

Six thousand muskets, which were to have been clandestinely sent from Prussia through the Danubian Principalities, had found their way into the hands of the Polish insurgents. According to reliable information, the insurgents had burned several railway bridges in the rear of Sosnowitz, to prevent the arrival of Russian reinforcements.

Dembrowski has been occupied by the insurgents.

A decree of the Dictator-General has been published, constituting the Civil Court of Poland by the nomination of four Directors and two Secretaries.

It is asserted that an official report has been addressed by twelve priests to the Archiepiscopal Curia of Wilna, pointing out that the peasantry of the districts of Wilna and Grodno are favorable to the insurrection and only await success to return to the Roman Catholic religion.

The Russian troops had committed massacres at Dusznowice, in the district of Biala. They also profaned and murdered the churches.

There was much activity in diplomatic circles at Paris on the Polish question. The Austrian Ambassador, Prince Metternich, had gone to Vienna, and the First Secretary of the Prussian Legation started the same day for Berlin.

The London Times reviews the progress of the rebellion, and though it is far from saying that Poland, if left to herself, will be eventually a match for the Russian power, yet it is fully established that it is a great national war of independence. So far from the rebellion being crushed, it seems not impossible that it will break down the Russian power, for a time, at least, far beyond the limits of the conventional kingdom of Poland. In the more rugged and woody parts of the country Russian authority is almost at an end. The Times says it has reason to believe that Earl Russell has fully expressed the sorrow and anger with which the English people behold the sufferings of an unfortunate nation. The reply from St. Petersburgh, to a courteous letter of the Emperor of the French, is said to be a refusal on the part of the Czar to make any concessions to Poland, or listen to anything short of unconditional submission.

The Morning Post says, the English Government do not propose to interfere between the Czar and the Polish insurgents; they simply counsel moderation and justice, and a return to the observance of the letter of solemn treaties.

A deputation had an interview on the 12th with Lord Palmerston to present a memorial, praying that England would interfere in aid of Poland, and it was urged that a war with Russia in such a cause would be acceptable to the country. Lord Palmerston was strongly pressed to give an opinion on the matter, but he declined.

An imposing popular demonstration in favor of Poland had taken place at Marseilles. The crowd surrounded the Russian Consulate and a military force was summoned to the spot. Similar demonstrations were contemplated at Lyons and Bordeaux.

LANGIEWICZ, THE DICTATOR.

From the London Star.

Marian Langiewicz is a young man, not yet 34 years of age. He has not the conventional or romantic proportions of a warrior, being of no greater stature than Julius Cæsar or the First Napoleon. He belongs to the Grand Duchy of Posen, where his father was a physician, and his brother now practices the same profession. Young Langiewicz from a very early age determined to serve his country, and in order to serve her, to learn the use of arms. Besides studying in Breslau and in Prague, where he occupied himself chiefly with the study of the Bohemian tongue, he entered a military school in Prussia, served for some time in the army, and obtained a good position as an officer in the artillery. But it need hardly be said, that to remain in the employment of Frederick William, of Prussia, formed no part of Langiewicz's ambition. When Napoleon III. aroused the hopes of all the fallen nationalities by declaring war against Austria, Langiewicz, too, made his way into Italy. He arrived, however, only in time to witness the sudden and bewildering peace of Villafranca concluded; but he was one of those who saw clearly that that inopportune and extraordinary step could not possibly close the revolutionary crisis which the campaigns in Lombardy had opened.

Langiewicz then attached himself to the fortunes of the great popular hero of the day, the foremost partisan soldier of the age, Joseph Garibaldi. He took part in the secret preparations for the daring attempt upon Sicily, which was crowned with such splendid success. When Garibaldi crossed to the mainland Langiewicz followed his progress, and bore his part in the crowning victory achieved upon the banks of the Volturno. Garibaldi held a high opinion of the young Pole's military capacity, and when the Italian civil war was at an end, Langiewicz formed a connection (through the Ex-Dictator) with the Polish exile Mieroslawski. The latter was then directing in Paris a military school for the instruction of Polish emigrants, and he invited the co-operation of Langiewicz. The offer was eagerly accepted, and Langiewicz devoted himself for some time to directing in artillery studies the pupils of Mieroslawski's school. Subsequently this school was transferred to Genoa, or at least another, for the same purpose and on the same plan, was formed at Genoa. The school, which had the permission of the Italian Government for its operations, was assisted by Lamoricière, who took up his residence in Genoa. Most of our readers will remember that when Russia was about to recognize the Kingdom of Italy she called upon the Italian Government to suppress this school. It was suppressed accordingly, to the great indignation of many Italians, who thought it utterly unworthy the Government of having yielded submissively to a foreign demand.

But before this arrest had come to pass, Langiewicz had left Italy and returned to Poland. He was, of course, thoroughly on the side of all the active movements of the National party in Russian Poland, and was one of those who, after the demonstration of February, 1861, in Warsaw, considered insurrection inevitable. The outbreak, which has now reached such great dimensions, was not a premeditated and general rebellion. It was an irregular outburst against the conscription. Many sincere patriots thought it premature and inopportune, and many, therefore, at first inclined to discourage it, or allow it to die out. Langiewicz judged otherwise. Although almost unknown in the country, he effected his entrance into the first insurrectionary band, which ventured in the forests of Southern Poland. The rest the world knows.

THE POSITION OF RUSSIA AND FRANCE.

A dispatch dated Paris, March 11, says:

"The anxiety of the Russian Government to the letter of the deputation from the French Foreign Office on the affairs of Poland is not satisfactory. It is described as stating that whatever may be thought of the abstract justice of the demands of the Poles, the Emperor Alexander can listen to no argument in favor of ceasing to be in a state of insurrection. Otherwise it is courteous in decided, though not discourteous, in tone. Soon after the arrival of the document, a Cabinet Council met. There are various and conflicting reports as to what steps the French Emperor may take in this matter, and whether Austria

THE ATTITUDE OF THE GREAT POWERS.

A dispatch dated Berlin, March 11, says:

"The Staatsanzeiger of to-day, in its non-official portion, denounces as an entire fabrication the statement made by the Opinion Nationale upon the 8th instant, of the convention of the Convention between Prussia and Russia of the 8th of February. The Staatsanzeiger further denies the truth of the remarks in the Moniteur of the 7th inst., that an explanation had been asked of the Prussian representative at Frankfort by the Federal Diet of the disturbances, stated as likely to result from the Convention to the German Confederacy.

The Staatsanzeiger goes on to observe that England alone of the Great Powers has adopted the form of a dispatch to express in a friendly manner her objections to the Convention. The Government knows nothing of any verbal representations said to have been addressed to them upon the same subject by Austria and other German or non-German Powers, as well as by France."

AN ORDER FROM GRAND DUKE CONSTANTINE.

The official Warsaw Gazette, of the 8th, contains the following order of the day from the Grand Duke Constantine:

"It has come to the knowledge of His Imperial Highness that the peasants of the kingdom, faithful to their sovereign and to their oath, everywhere support the army, and use all their efforts in forwarding the pacification of tranquillity and the authority of the law, overthrown by the enemies of order and their own country.

Considering that it is indispensable to define that support by clear regulations, in order to prevent its becoming a danger for persons and property, the Grand Duke condescends to issue the following order:

1. The communal authorities must keep their eye on all persons that reside either permanently or temporarily within their communes, and even on those who merely pass through. The guardians (police) and the inhabitants of each commune will be at their disposition.

2. The mayors and municipal councillors are bound to arrest without delay any armed individual, any member of the insurgent bands, as well as all vagabonds, with the cooperation of a certain number of peasants, and give them up to the nearest military authorities.

3. The mayors and municipal councillors are to see that the peasants employed in making these arrests do not use any violence against their captives, and refrain from any arbitrary acts.

All persons infringing this order shall be severely punished."

The Times, in commenting upon this order, observes that the last clause is calculated to throw suspicion on the spontaneous devotion of the mayors, municipal councillors and peasants.

PROCLAMATIONS FROM THE PROVISIONAL GOVERNMENT.

According to a letter from Warsaw, the Kach publishes the text of three proclamations of the Provisional Government:

"The first, dated the 29th of January, is addressed to the Lithuanians, inviting them to follow the example of their brethren of the duchy of Warsaw. The chief act of the insurrection, it says, is to conquer land for the peasants. The second, dated the 5th ult., makes an appeal to Podolia, Volhynia, and the province of Lesser Russia. It reminds them that the first act of the Provisional Government was to gratuitously accord to the Polish peasants the property of certain lands; it dwells on the good relations which have always existed between Poland and Lesser Russia, and urges those provinces to take up arms against the common enemy. The third proclamation is addressed to the Poles placed under Prussian and Austrian rule."

They are conjured to remain quiet, and to confine themselves to aid the insurrection by sending money, arms, and volunteers, and by enlightening Europe as to the true state of Polish affairs.

GARIBALDI.

Gen. Langiewicz has received the following letter from Garibaldi:

Caprera, Sunday, March 1, 1863.

My Dear Langiewicz: May God bless you, and with you the sacred cause of your country! You will triumph by conducting your insurrection, as you do, in detail; and by propagating the movement through the whole of ancient Poland—and beyond those limits if you can. You will thus afford time to realize in fact the sympathies which you merit from all the world. You have already accomplished wonderful things—well worthy of the name of Poland. At the head of your youth you achieve miracles. We will all be with you—and soon.

JOSEPH GARIBALDI.

KOSSUTH SPEAKS.

Correspondence of the London Herald.

Turin, March.

Kossuth has spoken on the Polish question. An article, signed by the Ex-Dictator of Hungary, appears in the current number of the Gazzetta di Torino. As it is not improbable that before these lines reach you, M. Kossuth's letter will have found its way to your columns or to those of some of your contemporaries, I will be very sparing in my notice of this document. M. Kossuth's opinion is, that whatever may be the result of the present movement for national existence in Poland, that country is irrevocably lost to the House of Romanoff. The triumph of justice may be delayed, but the knell of Russian despotism is rung. The Russians themselves owe a deep debt of gratitude to the heroes of Poland, inasmuch as by their resistance to the conscription law the latter have refused to be employed as instruments for the oppression of the former. M. Kossuth expresses very bitter indignation against Prussia, who by her complicity with the Russian tyrant has forfeited her claims to be considered as the champion of German nationality. Nor is he less severe against Austria, notwithstanding her professions of absolute neutrality in the present struggle. In reply to her declaration that "to serve as the gendarme of a foreign power is incompatible with her dignity," he cries with Shakespeare, "I thank thee, Jew, for teaching me that word!" Austria's protestations of neutrality, argues the leader of the Hungarian exiles, are simply intended to deceive, and tremble for Galicia, knowing well that if once the movement should extend itself to her own territory, Hungary, Crotia and Italy will take the cue for action. Austria talks about a possible cession of Galicia. Well, then, says Mr. Kossuth, take her at her word. "Let Hungarians avail themselves of the opportunity, but we shall look for another." In the meanwhile your example will assist to inspire a resolute people, having the full consciousness of its rights, is never in want of opportunities. While biding our time we will say with Paulus Æmilius, "Clodem dimus neutra vestra fulciam cruce latior."

It is evident that M. Kossuth still believes in the long-promised "Hungarian rising"—an event regarded by him as ripe, which he has now, to say the truth, rather slow of belief. Nay, they are obliged to admit that Hungary occupies a very different position with regard to Austria to that which is presented by Venetia, with her homogeneous population and her well-defined national aspirations, continually kept alive by the spectacle of an independent Italian Kingdom making rapid strides toward maturity before her very eyes. This important distinction is fully recognized by the majority of the Italians, who are fain to confess that Hungary has, perhaps, chosen the better part in resolving to follow the fortunes of the Austrian Empire, regenerated and awakened to the invigorating influences of constitutional freedom. Whether this view of the case fairly represents the prevalent state of feeling among the Hungarians themselves, I cannot venture to determine; but that it should have been formed in a country that can have no possible pretence for wishing well to Austria must be considered as at least a presumptive argument in its favor.

THE POLISH QUESTION IN THE FRENCH SENATE.

Paris, Saturday, March 14.

In to-day's sitting of the Senate M. Larabre read the report of the Committee upon the petition in favor of Poland. The Committee have arrived at the following conclusions: In view of the present position of affairs, and of the negotiations which have been entered upon, the Committee, convinced by the communication which it has received, feels persuaded that the Government of the Emperor has done, and will continue to do, all that is just and possible and politic in favor of Poland. The Committee is therefore of opinion that it would be neither necessary nor justifiable to recommend the Ministry to take the petition into consideration, and for this reason proposes to the Senate, by a large majority, to leave the matter to the decision of the wish of the Emperor, and to pass to the order of the day. The Senate will discuss the conclusion of the report on Tuesday next.

GENERAL ENGLISH NEWS.

The corporation is empowered of Messrs. Pilkington Brothers, of London and Liverpool, American [illegible] and shareholders. The institution has about £3,000, and the liquidation will depend upon assistance from America.

In the House of Commons, on the 12th, Mr. Lindsay called attention to the state of the navy, and proved "that it is not expedient to commence at the present time building wooden ships, which were to be coated with iron armor-plates." He spoke at length in favor of iron ships over those built of wood, and mostly plated with iron. A general debate ensued, most of the speakers agreeing with Mr. Lindsay's views, and condemning the policy of the Admiralty.

Lord Palmerston complained that a very one-sided view of the question had been taken. In the course of his remarks he said that the iron frigate Warrior floated so many days without a leak on her in good every six weeks she was afloat. He (Lord Palmerston) had himself gone to sea in a despatch vessel for a length of time, and it was necessary to have such vessels, with mastmanned wood. He thought was to be either impossible with other nations which possessed such vessels. The French had some, and the Admiralty proposed to add five to the fifteen iron-plated ships now building. He brought the House to leave the question to the discretion of the Government. Mr. Lindsay's motion was finally rejected by a vote of 194 to 91.

The Parliamentary proceedings on the 15th were of no material interest.

It is asserted that irritation among the operatives in Lancashire was becoming very strong. They complain of the behavior of the Relief Committee, the administration of the Poor Law, the enormous reduction in wages, and that the workmen is sinking more and more deeply into the power of his employer by running into debt for rent.

FRANCE.

The Bank of France, on the 12th inst., reduced its rate of discount from 5 to 4½ per cent. The monthly returns of the Bank of France show an increase in the cash on hand of over fifty-four millions of francs, and a decrease in the bills discounted of over sixty-one millions.

A serious accident had occurred at Paris to one of the daughters of Mr. Sennac. The young lady was riding on horseback in the Bois de Boulogne with her father, when her horse took fright and threw her violently to the ground. Her head struck against the wheel of a carriage, and on being raised up her skull was found to be fractured. At latest dates she was said to be out of danger.

The Rente, on the 12th, opened firm, but closed flat, at 69.50.

THE FRENCH IN MEXICO.

From the Indépendance Belge, March 12.

If we are well informed, there was on Wednesday, at the Palace of the Tuileries, a council of Marshals, the deliberations of which had reference to affairs in Mexico. The delays of the expedition, and the excesses which it entails, are in Paris, in high governmental quarters, a subject of very ruffled discontent. This feeling is exhibited in a kind of rumors, which, if they are not well founded, do not the less disclose the state of things. The most remarkable of these are one about the recall of the army and the constitution of some kind of peace with Juarez; another, the substitution for Gen. Forey of another chief, or at least the curtailment of his powers, so that M. Dubois de Saligny should resume the diplomatic functions of which he had been deprived.

THE CONSCRIPTION IN FRANCE.

Correspondence of the London Times.

Paris, Thursday, March 12.

In virtue of an Imperial decree, dated Monday last, the Commissioners appointed to prepare the lists for the conscription of the present year are to commence their operations on the 20th inst., and to complete them by the 25th of April. The number of conscripts to be raised is 100,000. These are to be drawn from the number of young men inscribed on the lists. They amount this year to 222,428. The number of names inscribed last year was 221,948. The period for paying 2,500 francs for exemption from the service will expire on the 7th May next. Independently, the number of conscripts to be left at home to assist their families is fixed at 3 per cent., or 3,000 out of the entire 100,000.

ITALY.

The official Turin Gazette publishes the bill authorizing the conclusion of the new loan, followed by a royal decree regulating the terms of its emission. The principal conditions are that a portion of the loan will be taken by private individuals (Messrs. Rothschilds and the National Bank,) and the remainder be submitted to public subscription. The rate of purchase will be determined by ministerial decree. The subscription is to be paid in ten installments, the first payable at the time of subscription, and the last upon the 20th of March, 1864. The rate of emission is at 71. The contract holds good for 700,000,000 lire, but it is not intended to raise more than 500,000,000. One hundred millions of lire have been reserved, to be submitted to a national public subscription.

M. ALBERTO MARIO.

A Turin letter to the Times, dated March 11, says:

"M. Alberto Mario, the husband of Miss Weston, sent in this day his resignation of his seat in Parliament, to which he had been returned by the constituency of Cascorie, in Sicily. The President of the Chamber announced that this resignation was grounded on the republican principles of M. Mario, which did not allow him to take the oath of fealty to the King and the Constitution. He, however, declined reading before the Chamber the letter of M. Mario. It is understood that this letter is couched in language insulting to the person of the King, no less than to the existing institutions of the country. The letter, it is said, will be put into the hands of the judicial authorities for criminal prosecution."

AUSTRIA.

Vienna, Saturday, March 14.

The semi-official Generale Correspondenz says, Prince Metternich has been summoned to Vienna from Paris to report to the Ministry the present condition of political affairs.

TURKEY.

The National Assembly at Bucharest had, during its debate on the budget, passed a vote of want of confidence in the Ministry.

The military force stationed at Kalafat had revolted against the Major in command.

GREECE.

Demonstrations in favor of King Otho are reported from various parts of Greece.

WEST COAST OF AFRICA.

The February mails from the various places on the West Coast of Africa are received. Trade was very dull at most places, but at Cape Coast Castle, Sierra Leone and Bathurst it showed an improving tendency. Palm oil was in limited supply, and high prices were demanded by the native.

No captures of slavers are reported.

THE LATEST VIA QUEENSTOWN.

London, Sunday, March 13.

The Union and Emancipation Society of Manchester having sent a protest to Earl Russell against fitting out vessels for the Confederates in England, Earl Russell replies by pointing out that the act of Parliament requires evidence on oath to enable proceedings to be taken against parties suspected of contravening the law.

Langiewicz was, on the 12th inst., formally proclaimed Dictator of Poland by the revolutionary party at Warsaw.

The Poles had defeated the Russians, under Col. Tall, near Mysenowo. One hundred Russians were killed.

The Paris Moniteur has positive information that the Archbishop of Warsaw is among the members of the Polish Council who have tendered their resignations.

The Spanish Government have refused to permit a meeting at Madrid in favor of the Poles.

MISCELLANEOUS WAR ITEMS.

—The following is the address made by Major-Gen. Burnside in acknowledgment of the serenade given him the night after his arrival in Cincinnati:

My Friends: I beg to thank you for the very kind manner in which you have received me, and I take it as being the more complimentary, since I have come home among my own people. It is gratifying to me, because it seems to say that I have in your opinion done my duty. I come to you with full and abiding faith in the success of our cause. I have seen many and very dark hours in my soldier's experience, but in my darkest hours I have felt that the right will prevail. I know that we have the physical ability to put down this rebellion, and if I doubted that, I should still feel that there is a God who will sustain the right. But I do believe that we have the strength and the ability to put down a rebellion which originated in fraud, deceit and ambition. It originated in fraud when the Southern leaders stole from the Government its arms and its generals, and were conspiring with its foes while they were robbing on its substance. If you show me a Southern leader or a Southern sympathizer, I say then we have an ambitious man, and the time has come when we must fight against ambition—when we must take as firm a stand as against this rebellion itself. Again, gentlemen, I thank you.

—A letter dated on board the New-London, off Galveston, March 7, says:

"I mentioned in my last concerning some refugees that visited us at Sabine Pass. We sent them to New-Orleans. One of them is a native of Huntington, L. I. They say that they knew within a radius of sixty miles over one thousand men who have banded together for the purpose of resisting the rebel conscript law. They are wandering about in the swamps, and if they could have Federal protection from arbitrary arrests and persecutions they would form a Union regiment. The guns of the Morning Light, with proper means, could be raised, and with them a powerful battery built at the Pass, which would easily blockade the place. These men, understanding the character of the people about, and the nature of the surrounding country, would be the most fit to man such a battery. The remembrance of their past outrages, privations and wrongs would make them fight with fourfold vigor, and would form a nucleus for a Union army of loyal citizens of Texas, of whom there are hundreds. These matters have been presented to the consideration of their proposed light by Commander Read, and it is hoped that the importance of his report may meet with that attention and consideration to which their importance entitles them."

—We have already given the story of the eighteen privates who were detached for special service by Gen. Mitchell, were taken prisoners by the rebels, and after incredible sufferings, reached Washington a few days since. The sequel to their story is thus told by the Star, of March 9:

"Yesterday, by request, these returned soldiers had an interesting interview with the Judge Advocate, Gen. Holt, and also with the Secretary of War, in the presence of a number of army officers. The Secretary presented each of them with a medal, such as was authorized by the last Congress for inoculation of the enemy during the first campaign of that character. He, in addition, gave to each a hundred dollars, and ordered the payment of the arrearages due them, and a sum equivalent to that taken from them by the rebels. He also requested Gen. Tom to
